CLAIM BIG SUCCESSES IN 5 HOURS FIGHTING

London, July 1.—After weeks of intense bombardment with guns of every calibre, firing a million shells daily, the British early this morning launched a general offensive against the German line along a front of twenty miles north of the River Somme. They succeeded in taking the German front line trenches and capturing many men.

The French on the British right co-operate in the attack, when the last dispatches thus far received left British headquarters the fighting was still progressing and further successes, it was said, were being recorded.

The front for the offensive was decided on many weeks ago and the bombardment of the rest of the line, as well as the frequent raids which procured for British headquarters important information as to the disposition of the Germans, was designed to keep the German generals uncertain as to the point at which they would be called upon to meet the brunt of the attack.

Was Well Advertised.

This is the first time since the outbreak of the war that the intention of an army to undertake an offensive has been so well advertised. A week ago, when the German attacks against Verdun began to make further progress and it was feared the army of the crown prince was getting within a distance of Verdun which was dangerous for the allies, the British guns began to speak. Since then, except for the hours when British infantrymen were raiding German trenches, a continual bombardment has been maintained.

The approaches to Thiaumont are still in the hands of the French.

On the west of the Meuse fighting of great violence lasted throughout the night in the neighborhood of Eisen-Avocourt road. The Germans attacked heavily both east and west of Hill 304, but most of their attacks were repulsed. Nancy was bombarded by German long range guns.

The vigorous counter-stroke by which the French have wrested back from the Germans the Thiaumont redoubt north of Verdun means, according to military operations, not only a serious loss to the enemy in position but an even more serious loss in the matter of time.

The growing activity of the British on a long line on the western front increases the odds against the Germans capturing the Meuse fortress.

A loss of Thiaumont is considered as throwing the Germans back at least ten days. As the work commands the Vaux ravine, without its possession the Germans cannot progress in their task of sapping the first inner line defenses on the Froide Terrehax Souville front.

The French plan of attack was successfully matured in secret as no special preliminary bombardment preceded it. The French forces masked gradually and the enemy was taken as much unaware as is possible under present conditions. The dash of the storming party was so well timed and speedy that its work was done before the German curtain of fire could be adequately stopped.

The Germans were rapidly cleared out of the trenches and defenses prepared for the inevitable counter-attacks which were promptly delivered with desperate attacks.

The Frenchmen had, however, held out long enough to enable fresh troops to come up and these again won back the redoubt, which is now entirely in French hands. The Germans are making strenuous efforts to recapture it and there was desperate fighting last night but so far the Germans have had no success.

Wreck All Within Range.

Batteries, which are now innumerable, took turns at smashing the German defense, destroying communication trenches and blowing up ammunition depots. New trench mortars, particularly destructive, tore away wire entanglements, broke down parapets and generally opened the way for men with rifles and bayonets. Big guns of fifteen inches and other large calibres prevented the Germans from bringing up supports, wrecking everything within range.

The artillery fire was particularly intense on a stretch of the front north of the Somme. Earlier dispatches told of the destruction of the towns of Chaulnes and Beaucourt, where the Germans had concentrated ammunition.

Fiercest of the War.

Early this morning more guns were brought into action on this twenty mile sector, and for an hour and a half the Germans were subject to a bombardment which is described as the fiercest experienced in this war of heavy artillery.

The news of the British offensive which was quickly circulated in London, created the greatest enthusiasm and details of the battle are anxiously awaited. Only this morning the correspondents warned the public that an advance must be made by infantry and not by artillery and that the British army could not expect to come out of the engagement scathless. First accounts of the battle, however, state that the British casualties were not heavy.

The news spread throughout London like wildfire. There was a frantic rush to obtain special editions of the evening newspapers. Along the Strand and other thoroughfares there was a turmoil of excitement. From the tops of buses, passengers, especially soldiers, cheered the tidings which had been awaited so eagerly. Men and women in little groups scanned the special editions, then broke out in cheers of joy.

SEVERAL TOWNS CAPTURED.

Allied Offensive Scores Heavily in First Five Hours.

British Headquarters in France, July 1.—(1:00 p. m.)—Reports received from the front up to 12:30 o'clock, five hours after the combined French and British offense was launched, showed that the allies had captured the towns of Labotselle, Zerre and Montauban, and Curlu and Faviere woods.

The main first line trenches over the entire front under attack are reported to have been stormed, and at various points the fighting has reached the main second line.

These reports show that the French and British, at the points of their furthest advances, have broken through a distance of more than five miles beyond the first German trenches. Montauban is five and one-half miles east of the old British front, and Curlu wood is six miles east-southeast of Albert.

The British are endeavoring to surround Thiepval and at other points the struggle is under way for towns and villages. Reports from the front indicate that the important German position at Fricourt may be cut off.

The terrific bombardment which preceded the attack lasted about an hour and a half. It is too early as yet to give any but the barest particulars of the fighting which is developing in intensity. The British casualties have so far been comparatively light according to official report.

The artillery bombardment of the last few days was concentrated this morning with a degree of fury and a number of guns which were unprecedented in the region of Albert and the Somme, with the French co-operating to the south.

At this hour the British are making good progress behind the front lines in German held territory. Serre and Montauban, which the British have captured, are important tactical points. Serre is southeast of Hebutern and Montauban is northwest of Bray. The British are fighting for the villages of Mametz and Contalmaison, portions of which they hold.

The French advancing on the British right, are moving with great steadiness. After the assault they very quickly covered a distance of two kilometres beyond the German front line. Thus far the day has gone well for France and England.

Infantry Springs From Trenches.

At 7:30 o'clock through clouds of smoke and dust which hung over the whole field as far as the eye could see, the infantrymen sprang from the trenches for an assault over a front of twenty miles. Already it has gained posession of the first line trenches and the advance is continuing.

The new British trench mortars, which fire thirty-five shots a minute, played a great part, cutting wire entanglements and destroying trenches.

Robert Bengs, residing at 2329 Weisser Park avenue, and foreman for the Engineering company. Winter street and Wabash avenue, and seven or eight other workmen, narrowly escaped death shortly after 10 o'clock Saturday morning, when the entire front of three stories of the Carnahan building, 113 West Jefferson street, gave way, crashing to the street.

Bengs was badly cut and bruised about the head, face and arms, but his injuries are not regarded as fatal. He was attended by Dr. Edward J. McOscar.

An entire now front was being put in the building and lack of sufficient supports is believed to have weakened it to such an extent that when a large cross beam was being hoisted the weight of it caused the entire front to give way. The ropes holding the beam were broken and came down to the sidewalk with a terrific crash, missing two or three of the workmen by but a few inches. Bricks and timbers fell in every direction, many of them landing in the middle of the street. Fortunately no one was passing at the time.

That none of the workmen was killed outright or buried beneath the debris is regarded as little less than miraculous. The crash came almost without a moment's warning, just as the big iron beam was about in the right position to be placed. Several of the workmen were working inside of the building, several feet from the front.

The building is owned by Weil brothers and was undergoing extensive repairs. Remodeling of the building had commenced last Monday.

Most of the workmen who were working on the sidewalk and were

HAY RELIEF BILL PASSES THE HOUSE

Provides $2,000,000 for Dependent Families of Guardsmen.

Washington, July 1.—The Hay bill, appropriating $2,000,000 for dependent families of national guardsmen called or drafted in the present emergency, was passed by the house today. The bill, which now goes to the senate, allows not exceeding $50 a month to the dependent families in the discretion of the secretary of war.

Representatives Small, democrat, North Carlina, and James, republican, Michigan, were the only members to vote against the bill, which passed 297 to 2.

A general revenue bill, designed to produce about $210,000,000 from increased surtaxes on incomes and special taxes on inheritances and war munition plants, was introduced in the house today by Kitchien, the democratic leader.

It carries a provision creating a non-partisan tariff commission and an anti-dumping clause and proposes abolishing stamp taxes by eliminating schedules A and B, of the Underwood tariff law. The measure will be taken up in the house next Thursday under a special rule.

The house today agreed to the conference report on the fortifications appropriation bill with a total of $25,748,050 cash appropriations and $13,800,000 in authorized contracts. An increase of $4,880,450 over the total as the measure originally passed the house, is largely in appropriations for ammunition reserves.

HUGHES AT WORK ON ACCEPTANCE SPEECH

Bridgehampton, N. Y., July 1.—Charles E. Hughes is working today on his speech of acceptance of the republican nomination for president. A big portfolio of notes and letters, made or received since he was nominated, furnished material for the document. Several days, at least, will be required to complete it.

While no definite date has been set for the notification ceremony there now seems [illegible] of deviation from the [illegible] of July 15.

CRISIS AT STANDSTILL

MUCH IMPATIENCE AT WASHINGTON

Adjournment of Congress May Force Action Over to Wednesday.

Washington, July 1.—Developments here in the Mexican crisis were at a standstill again today, while the United States government awaited impatiently Carranza's reply to the note sent last Sunday, demanding a statement of his intentions toward the American expedition in Mexico.

Messages received at the state department from Special Agent Rodgers at Mexico City, made no mention of the Mexican answer. Mr. Rodgers, so far, has been unable to forecast the action of Gen. Carranza and the only intimations reaching here have been through diplomatic and private dispatches. These have indicated that the de facto government was preparing to stand by its attitude of hostility toward United States troops across the border.

After today, if it should become necessary for him to address congress, he would wait until Wednesday, as both houses arranged to adjourn over the Fourth of July.

MERCURY TABLETS ARE FATAL TO BABY

The eating of bichloride of mercury tablets at 11 o'clock Friday morning resulted in the death of little Mary Louise, the two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Rauch at the Hope hospital at 7 o'clock, Friday evening.

As told in Friday evening's Sentinel, the family was moving from South Harrison street to Wildwood avenue and the tablets were accidentally dropped to the floor. The child thinking they were candy, ate several of them. The mother although moving had watched the baby all morning and had turned her back for just a moment. No one knew that bichloride of mercury tablets had been dropped to the floor until later.

Soon after the baby became deathly sick and was rushed to the hospital, where immediate medical attention was given to her, but all efforts to save her life were of no avail.

The little girl was a favorite of all who knew her. For a child of her age she was exceptionally bright and a most beautiful youngster. The parents are prostrate with grief. The father is the secretary of the American Steel Dredge company and surviving besides the parents are a brother, Karl D., a member of the Purdue battery, now stationed at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and a sister, Miss Kathryn. Governor Samuel M. Ralston has been appealed to in an effort to secure the release of Karl in order that he might come home to attend his little sister's funeral. It is believed that under such circumstances the request will be granted.

Believes Auburn Officer Should Be Made Brigadier General.

Washington, July 1.—With Vice President Marshall and Senators Kern and Taggart pulling for the appointment of Capt. Charles D. Herron, of the regular army as brigadier general of the Indiana brigade, Representative Cyrus Cline, of Indiana, yesterday threw a monkey wrench into the machinery by filing vigorous protests against the appointment of Capt. Herron, both with the war department and with Governor Ralston.

Representative Cline wired his protest to Governor Ralston. A constituent of Representative Cline, Col. A. H. Kuhlman, of Auburn, Ind., is the senior colonel of the Indiana national guard and cline contends he is entitled to the brigadier generaley.

"For three years," said Representative Cline, "Col. Kuhlman has been the senior colonel of the Indiana national guard. I feel that it would simply be an outrage to import a regular army officer and advance him to the post of brigadier general over Col. Kuhlman, a home man who is just as well qualified as any regular army officer. Col. Kuhlman is an expert tactician and abundantly qualified in every respect. He is a republican and I am a democrat and my only interest is in seeing that justice is done."

Representative Cline went to the war department in person yesterday afternoon to lodge his protest where it would be most effective.

BOND ISSUE LOOMS AS A POSSIBILITY

Will Be Determined When Treasury Balance is Figured.

Washington, July 1.—Treasury officials were busy today figuring the treasury's net balance for the fiscal year which ended last midnight with a view to determining whether a bond issue will be necessary to care for the extraordinary expenses of the Mexican crisis.

There is an agreement among administration leaders to ask congress to authorize such a bond issue in the event the ordinary resources of the treasury and the additional $210,000,000 expected from the administration revenue bill are not sufficient.

The expenses incident to the Mexican emergency already provided for or estimated approximately $125,000,000. This as well as any further expense would be covered in the proposed bond issue.

Authority to issue bonds may not be sought from congress if the treasury surplus is large enough. This should be known today. At the close of business yesterday it was $174,171,845 and prospects were that it would be increased to more than $200,000,000.

The administration omnibus revenue bill, which will raise $210,000,000, was ready for introduction in the house today. The democratic leaders plan to begin consideration of the measure in the house next Thursday under a special rule providing for a final vote before adjournment Saturday.

A British staff officer who witnessed the advance at the junction of the French and British lines, said the attack was launched as though the men were on parade.

Simultaneously with the launching of the British offensive French infantry advanced to the attack. This movement of the French troops was inaugurated over a section of the French line adjoining the junction point with the British front.

The tremendous offensive which has been launched by the British army on the German front is the culmination of a five-day bombardment which in the amount of ammunition expended and in the territory involved exceeds anything of the kind that has been previously known in the world war.

For some weeks reports have been current in England and France that the "big push" of the British was about to commence. It was stated that England had 2,000,000 men, fully equipped and trained, in preparation for the supreme effort to break the German lines.

More than 1,000,000 shells are declared to have been fired daily in the preliminary bombardment which extended over a front ninety miles in length.

The menace of the British attack was fully appreciated in Germany, according to newspaper comments from Berlin, and the utmost confidence was expressed in the ability of the Germans to meet and crush it.

Allies on Offensive.

The allies are now on the offensive in practically every field of the war. The British assault comes on the heels of the great successes won by the Russians in Galicia and Bukowina, which have resulted in completely driving the Austrians from Bukowina and are still continuing. On the Italian front the central powers have also met with severe reverses and for several days the Italians have been steadily driving the Austrians from position after position in Trentino. The defense also of Verdun by the French appears to have stiffened and the balance of battle in that bitterly contested sector appears recently to have swayed in favor of the defenders.

New Departure in Tactics.

The great offensive undertaken by the British offers, according to reports from the front and the comments of military critics, an absolutely new departure in the tactics hitherto pursued by the belligerents.

Contrary to the favorite tactics of the Germans, the British did not attempt a partial advance by massing their artillery at a given point on the line and following an intense bombardment by an infantry attack in serried columns.

Employing an enormous number of guns the British maintained a continuous and even bombardment of the German lines along the entire ninety miles of attack. They sought to level the German trenches and destroy the concrete fortifications which sheltered the German machine gun squads.

Hurricanes of Shells.

Hurricanes of shells were also directed against the German barbed wire entanglement. In the evenings, following this daily artillery storm, raiding parties dashed out from the British lines to complete the destruction wrought by the big guns. In this way the British claim that many prisoners were taken, machine guns destroyed or captured, and the entire defense of the Germans demoralized. A French officer who witnessed this plan of operations, described it as "the last word in scientific warfare."

The last considerable offensive undertaken by the British was a drive at Loos in September, 1915, in conjunction with a similar French effort in the Champagne district. The British captured Loos and claimed to have taken 20,000 German prisoners and many guns. They were unable to press home their advantage, however, because, according to the British war office, the reserves failed to arrive on time.

The British official losses in the battle of Loos were 60,000 men. That the British public is prepared to face roll of dead and wounded on an even vaster scale is indicated by the comments of the British newspapers in anticipation of the present offensive. Political and military leaders have warned the nation that the smashing of the German lines could not possibly be accomplished except at an appalling loss of life. It has been asserted, indeed, that the British authorities were prepared to face a loss of some hundreds of thousands of soldiers if they could achieve their object and drive the Germans from France and Belgium.

The only front in the whole theater of the world war where comparative quiet reigns today is in the Balkans, and the predictions of an allied advance in that region have been at least as numerous and circumstantial as those regarding the British army on France. There have been some minor indications of portending activity in the Balkans in the form of increasing artillery activity, aerial raids and efforts by the Bulgarians to strengthen their lines by the occupation of fortresses on the Greek side of the frontier.

Newspaper correspondents at Saloniki have estimated that the allies have a total of 600,000 to 700,000 veteran soldiers concentrated on their lines in that district. The reorganized Serbian army, reported to be 150,000 strong, was recently transported to Saloniki from the island of Corfu, where they had been re-equipped. The British are said to have brought 200,000 men from Egypt, in addition to large numbers who were sent to Greece, following the ill-fated Dardanelles expedition. The balance of the force is composed of French troops, the majority also veterans of the Dardanelles. The highest estimate placed on the Bulgarian forces, which must oppose this great army, has been between 200,000 and 300,000 men. A dispatch from the Bulgarian front stated recently that the German troops who had been operating in the Balkans had been withdrawn to other fronts and that the brunt of any attack must be borne by the Bulgarians.

The portion of the line selected by the British for the inauguration of the drive runs from the Somme northward past Albert to a point about eight miles south of Arras. It is on the section of the western front which runs roughly north and [illegible] from the North sea thro[illegible] and northern France [illegible] sharply to the Swiss border. Albert is seventy miles northeast of Paris.

There has been muc hheavy fighting over this ground, but not to the extent that further north, where lie the battlefields of Arras, Loos, Neuve Chapelle, Ypris and Dixmude.

During the early stages of the battle at Verdun when the French were compelled to bring up large reserves to meet the German drive the British took over a long section of French trenches, and now hold about ninety miles of the western front. What remains of the Belgian army, under command of King Albert, is in the trenches from the North sea to a point near Lizorne, about six miles northeast of Ypres. The British army, under General Sir Douglas Haig holds the line from the junction with the Belgians as far as the Somme.

The number of Germans opposite the British front and in reserve behind the lines was estimated a month ago at 800,000.

GERMANS GAIN AT VERDUN.

Paris, July 1.—(12 noon.)—After four violent attacks with liquid fire the Germans succeeded in capturing the positions east of Hill 304 which were taken by the French yesterday. The French made a counter attack and recaptured the position, according to an official statement issued by the war office today.

After several furious assaults the Germans succeeded in penetrating the works around Thiaumont which were captured by the French yesterday, according to the official statement.

RUSSIANS IN RETREAT.

Constantinople, July 1.—(Via London, 1:45 p. m.)—The Russian force recently driven back by the Turks from the Persian border of Mesopotamia, is effecting a further retreat in the direction of Kermanshah, Persia, under Turkish pursuit, according to a war office statement today.

REPULSED BY GERMANS.

Berlin, July 1.—(Via London, 5:20 p. m.)—Reconnoitering attacks by French and British troops along the western front during the night were in all cases repulsed by the Germans, the war office announced today.

Those On the Job.

Among those working on the job were the following: Herman Doenges and son, Herman L., 2945 Hanna street; George Kaiser, 1317 Hugh street; Frederick J. Kaiser, 1507 Lewis street; Martin W. Ferber, 2818 South Calhoun street; Henry Black, George Meltz, Walter Pogorrzlski and Joe Zahner. Bengs, the injured man, is a brother of Gustave Bengs, manager of the Engineering company.

Fellow workmen, at the risk of their lives, went to the rescue of Bengs, their foreman, and lost no time in lifting him from under the debris and carrying him to safety. He was later removed to the Lutheran hospital in the police ambulance, where he was given immediate medical attention.

Pagorrzlski's Version.

"It sounded like somebody blew up the building," said Walter Pagorrzlski, who was holding the big chain attached to the huge beam and was trying to guide the brace into place at the time of the collapse. He was standing inside the building on the first floor. "I was almost under the beam," he said. "I saw the sidewalk start to go down first. I believe the sidewalk caved in the first thing. There was an awful racket. I thought the whole building was coming down. I ran back into the building. The floor shook like an earthquake. I thought I was a goner. I did not see Banks fall or [illegible] thing of the wreck till it was ove[illegible] I kept trying to get away. When the dust settled down I looked back. Everything in front looked like a cyclone[illegible]

Black Talks.

Henry Black and George Meltz were inside the building on the second floor turning the wheel of the windlass which was raising the two and a half ton beam into place.

"We had the beam almost high enough," Black said. "Something broke. It sounded like everything happened at once. I saw Bengs, who was standing on the beam, drop out of sight. The floor on which we stood started to go down. We tried to run towards the back of the building. It was all over in a minute. I think the cable broke first."

For several minutes after the collapse of the front of the structure pieces of plank and brick came rattling down at intervals. Police were kept busy driving curious spectators back from the path of danger.

Bengs was reported late Saturday afternoon as getting along nicely. No bones were broken.

The Carnahan building had been leased to Kilbourne & Perry, local real estate builders, by Weil Brothers some months ago, who had sub-leased it to a furniture company moving here from South Bend. The furniture company had closed the sub-lease a couple or three weeks ago and expected to occupy the building not later than August 1.

the week ending at noon, yesterday, following an increase of more than 50 per cent. the preceding seven days. A total of 2,036 men were sworn in this week as against 1,105 last week. The preceding average weekly enlistment was in the neighborhood of 700.

During the 100 days of recruiting under the authority granted by congress to increase the regular army immediately after the Columbus raid, a total of 13,251 men have been accepted out of 59,406 applicants for enlistment. New York city led the recruiting last week, with 1,024 men accepted, against 273 the preceding week; Chicago was next, with 897 against 227, and San Francisco third, with 421 aaginst 81.

The war department issued today a brief bulletin under its new censorship rules. It reported that increment of the California and Illinois national guard for the border last night and obtained excerpts from messages from Gen. Funston, giving a variety of border reports already covered in the press dispatches.

It was plain that administration officials were impatient at the failure to receive any word of when the Mexican note might be expected since the demand for a prompt reply went to Mexico City last Sunday. How much longer President Wilson would consent to wait was a subject of much speculation.

Another indication tending to support the belief that the reply will be unfavorable was the memorandum given out yesterday by the Mexican foreign office. It specifically denied all the charges contained in the American note replying to General Carranza's representations for withdrawal of troops, and laid the blame for attacks on Americans in Mexico on the carelessness of the Americans themselves. It is untrue, the memorandum stated, that the Mexican authorities have protected bandits who raided American border communities, or have made no efforts to apprehend them.

Strong assurances may be given in the Mexican reply, it is believed by officials here, of the de facto government's ability to protect the border against further raids. The Mexican embassy stated fifty thousand troops would be available for this service if the American line is withdrawn.

President Wilson returned from New York shortly before 8 o'clock this morning. He went directly to the white house.

DAMAGES SOUGHT IN A JITNEY ACCIDENT

Asking damages for injuries received when auto driven by Charles Menefee and owned for hire as a jitney bus by Harry Menefee, was driven against him at the corner of Calhoun and Grand street, knocking him to the pavement, Fred Hilgemann Saturday filed suit in the superior court.

The driver is charged with failure to slow down or give a signal of approach of his car. Injuries sustained were to the defendant's leg and body when the auto struck him. It was necessary to call a doctor to attend the plaintiff, the complaint says, and Hilgemann was kept from his usual avocation. Harry H. Hilgemann is attorney for the plaintiff.

Suit Against Auto Company.

Divorce Is Sought.

Hazel Weick has brought suit in superior court for a divorce, alimony of $500, and custody of the child from Philip Weick. Mr. and Mrs. Weick were married May 22, 1909, and separated June 28, 1916. Cruel treatment is charged, the plaintiff alleging her husband attempted to choke her or do her bodily violence. Mrs. Weick also charges that Weick made false accusations reflecting on her morality. The defendant is alleged to have a $300 equity in realty and $200 worth of household goods. The General Electric works, of which Weick is an employe, is made a defendant in order that the defendant may not draw money due him. A restraining order is also asked to prevent Weick from molesting his wife. Ryan, Ryan & Aldrich are attorneys for the plaintiff.

Divorce Suit Filed.

Josephine Burnworth has brought suit for a divorce from Charles Burnworth asking alimony of $1,000 and the custody of a minor child. The complaint recites that Mr. and Mrs. Burnworth were married March 19, 1914, and separated June 30, 1916. Cruelty is alleged and Burnworth is charged with beating his wife with his fists. Drunkenness is also charged. Lee J. Hartzell is attorney for the plaintiff.

QUESTION OF A FEW HOURS

Women's Press club of Indiana to take charge of a fund to be known as the soldiers' comfort fund, the purpose to which the fund is to be put being to provide for the little luxuries for the members of the Indiana national guard at the front. The fund was started with a $100 contribution from the Interstate Historical Pictures corporation, which is producing the centennial picture, "Indiana," and augmented by $5 from Governor Ralston's secretary, B. B. Johnson, whose son, Lieut. Fred Bates Johnson, is a member of the guard.

The purposes for which the fund is being raised in no way conflict with the organization of business men which is working for the creation of a large sum of money to take care of the families and dependents of the men who are members of the Indiana national guard. The comfort fund will be used to provide dainties that the army rations do not include, goggles to protect the eyes against the blinding dust and dazzling sun, cooling lotions for the parched skin, candies and tobacco.

Little Privations Worst.

Men who have served at the front have often declared that it is not the great hardships which are hard to bear, but the little privations. The longing for sweets, often dormant when they were easily to be had, becomes a gnawing yearning when in the trenches or camp, it is said, and the soldiers grow restless and discontented when the tobacco supply runs low.

The governor has asked that the people of the state contribute to this fund, the amounts being sent either direct to the Women's Press club, Indianapolis, or to the governor.

New Major of Infantry.

Capt. Jesse T. Johnson was appointed major of infantry, subject to examination, by Governor Ralston early today. He was assigned to command the second battalion of the new First regiment of infantry, which is under the command of Col. Leslie R. Naftzger.

Maj. Howard F. Noble, of Culver, who was appointed a major several days ago by the governor, has been designated to command the second battalion of the Second regiment of infantry. Both of the men have been appointed to places to which Governor Ralston formerly had sought to appoint regular army officers, who were not available for state duty.

The postoffice at Poe, Ind., has been discontinued, and patrons of that office will be served mostly by rural routes out of Fort Wayne.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

NEWS OF FORT WAYNE'S NEIGHBORS

Marion, Ind., July 1.—J. F. Johnson, keeper of a resort, is a fugitive somewhere in the swamps of the Kankakee here. He fired on his son, J. Wesley Johnson, three times last night, just as the latter was being brought home by M. S. Campbell, a constable, in an automobile. The officer pursued the father, but finally gave up the chase and brought the son back home for safety.

J. Wesley Johnson had been arrested for an alleged attempt on the life of his nephew, Floyd Albright, of Marion. During their encounter Johnson's mother died. She has since been buried at Columbia City.

MACHINE OWNER HELD.

Muncie, Ind., July 1.—Shortly after noon yesterday Detective Miller arrested Jesse Nicely, 52, a farmer residing six miles southwest on the Middletown pike, on a charge of unlawfully operating an automobile. He was released last night on bond. His trial will be held Monday morning at 8 o'clock before Judge Gregory.

It is claimed that Nicely's machine is responsible for the death of William Barnes, a laborer, who was killed by an automobile Wednesday evening about 9:30 o'clock near the corner of Liberty and Seymour streets.

HUNTINGTON BOY WINS CROSS

Huntington, Ind., July 1—Philip Lewis, a Harvard student, who was given leave of absence to join the American ambulance corps doing duty somewhere in France, has been awarded the French (Croix de Guerre) "cross of war." This honor is only given to those who perform feats of bravery under fire. He is not a fighting man but is connected with the American Red Cross. Nevertheless his dangers are just as great as those of the soldiers because he is compelled to face the same fire and he has no arms for his defense. Lewis is a former Huntington boy, but his people now live in Indianapolis.

SOLDIER GOT COLD FEET.

Warsaw, Ind., July 1.—A warrant was issued Friday for the arrest of Ray Grossnickle, who is wanted at Warsaw. Grossnickle enlisted with the Warsaw militia company a few days ago and while war in the distance looked good to him, yet the closer it got the less he liked the prospect and when the actual call came to get into service he could not be found. He has never been located.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCY FOR FARMERS.

Logansport, Ind., July 1.—To bring many men and boys into closer touch with farm life, as well as to provide employment for those that need it, the Council of Social agencies has opened an employment agency for men and boys willing to do farm labor. The work also is being done in appreciation of the charity work done by farmers for the Logansport societies in furnishing supplies.

FARMER CHARGED WITH SHOOOTING.

Goshen, Ind., July 1. — William Houseower, a farmer living near Nappanee, connected with a manufacturing concern of Nappanee, was placed under $1,000 bond charged with attempting to kill Scott Stein, a resident of Bremen, Ind.

During Houseower's absence from his home Stein took Mrs. Houseower for a carriage ride, it is alleged. When they returned Houseower appeared and fired twice into the vehicle, Stein says.

COUNCILMAN CONVICTED.

Youngstown, Ind., July 1.—After being out four hours a jury in Judge Barnum's branch of common pleas court Wednesday afternoon found Hugh Boyle, East Youngstown councilman, guilty under an indictment charging him with having an unlawful interest as an officer in a public contract. The deceased was born in Pennsylvania, coming here with her parents at the time this territory was opened up. She was well known throughout Elkhart county.

GAVE COOKIES TO SOLDIERS.

Huntington, Ind., July 1.—Mrs. Florence Perdue, living on East Franklin street, proved her patriotism yesterday in a substantial manner. Whenever a troop would pull into the Erie depot her little daughter, Dessie May, would go along the cars giving the soldiers cookies from a big basket she carried on her arm. As fast as the basket would be emptied—which was very often—the little girl would fill it up again.

MONTPELIER MAN A SUICIDE

Montpelier, Ind., July 1.—Anderson Mincer, 48, who until three months ago operated a soft drink parlor at Poneto, killed himself at four o'clock yesterday morning at his home at Montpelier by slashing his throat on each side with a pen knife. Elkhart, Ind., July 1.—The fact that he was 64 years old and had lost three wives already in his matrimonial experiences did not hamper John B. A FISH BIT HIM.

(From the Indianapolis News.)

H. E. Smith, of Fort Wayne, tells this one: "Business keeps me pinned down during the week, so I naturally look to Sunday for some recreation. I have two boys, one four and the other seven, and of course when I think of a pleasant Sunday those kids must be considered.

"Recently I longed for a day's fishing trip and sugested to my wife that I slip away from the kids and have a half day to myself fighting the finny tribe. Milady does not approve of such Sunday stunts, but to my surprise she not only insisted that I go but that I take the boys with me. She knew I had been working hard and that I was in need of recreation.

"On the following Sunday three fishermen sneaked out the back gate and walked nearly two miles to an ideal hole, where we fished to our heart's delight. I caught three or four fair-sized fish, while the younger boy managed to tear his clothes while climbing through a barbed wire fence.

"Several days later I was alarmed to receive a telephone call from my wife, who told me the younger boy had been missing since early in the morning. I hurried home, the neighborhood was aroused and all joined in a fruitless search. Not a sign of that kid.

"During the search two fishermen passed the house and the thought came to my wife that possibly the boy had taken another fishing trip. I jumped in my car and drove like mad to the place we had fished on that Sunday. As I climbed down the bank and through the barbed wire fence I caught a glimpse of white, and as I emerged from a thicket there sat that kid 'fishing' with a pole but no line.

"It was too good for me to punish him, although his clothes were a sight. His trousers and waist were torn and his face and hands just as dirty as possible. He grinned as he saw me and invited me to fish with him. Of course I sat down on the band with him and then asked him what on earth had happened to his clothes.

"'Why, pop,' said the boy, 'one of those blamed fish bit me.'"

ESCAPE WITH SLIGHT BRUISES.

Auto Carrying M. J. Stock and Herman Beuter Hit by Trolley Car.

When an interurban car at a crossing on the Indianapolis road, seven miles south of the city, struck an auto in which M. J. Stock, 1017 Wildwood avenue, and J. Herman Beuter, ex-county treasurer, were riding Friday afternoon, the rear wheels and back end of the car were damaged, but neither of the occupants were seriously hurt. Mr. Beuter jumped from the car and both received slight bruises. The interurban did not hit the auto squarely and for that reason danger of injury to either of the men was lessened.

The car was the property of Mr. Stock, and it was badly wrecked.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS FOR THE HOME

Psalm 119:33-48.

33. Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end.
34. Give me understanding, and I shall keep they law; yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart.
35. Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.
36. Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness.
37. Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way.
38. Stablish thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.
39. Turn away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good.
40. Behold, I have longed after thy precepts: quicken me in thy righteousness.
41. Let thy mercies come also unto me, O Lord, even thy salvation, according to thy word.
42. So shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me: for I trust in thy word.
43. And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth; for I have hoped in thy judgments.
44. So shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.
45. And I will walk at liberty; for I seek thy precepts.
46. I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.
47. And I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.
48. My hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes.

Rural Mail by the Automobile.

Sixteen automobiles have just been placed in service for the rural mail system out of Indianpolis, taking the place of twice as many horse-drawn wagons which have been used since the establishment of the rural mail delivery system some years ago. The experiment will be watched with interest because of protests that have been made at some other points at which the motor-driven mail wagons were placed in service on the rural routes.

In theory, at least, the automobile has all the best of it for the rapid transportation of mail between the postoffice and the rural patron. There would appear to be no reason in the world why the service cannot thus be made more expeditious, more satisfactory and every bit as dependable as under the old plan. It may be argued that the highways about the smaller cities and towns are not yet improved to a degree that would warrant the universal use of the automobile on the rural route, and yet the automobile is today going about everywhere that the horse-drawn vehicle can go. Steady improvement of the highway system in Indiana, too, is removing the last possible objection to the newer idea. The rural free delivery of mail is in no sense a profit-making concern. It is a public service maintained at heavy cost, because it is believed to be worth it, and it has come to stay. That being true, it ought to be made as efficient as possible, and the automobile looks very much like the means to that end.

Pretty much everybody is now indulging in the popular pastime of declaring that the unpreparedness of the United States in a military way is little short of criminal, and that it is unthinkable that a great country should permit itself to be caught in so helpless a predicament. At the same time there is the most cheerful unanimity of agreement that the other fellow is wholly to blame. It is never easy to admit individual responsibility in any situation which must be regarded as the logical outcome of the state of citizenship and the public mind as a whole. We can improve conditions immensely when we begin to realize that we are chargable for what happens or for what fails to happen just in proportion to the exertion we have put forth in meeting the full requirement of citizenship—in sharing its burdens and in solving its problems as well as enjoying its benefits. Public policy is to no small degree a personal matter, after all.

Congressman Cline is exerting his efforts with the war department to secure the appointment of Col. A. L. Kuhlman, of Auburn, as brigadier general of the new Indiana brigade in preference to the selection of a regular army officer for that position. Mr. Cline argues that for three years Colonel Kuhlman has been the senior colonel of the Indiana national guard, and he has given long years of continuous service to the militia in one capacity or another. Whether Mr. Cline shall prove successful in his efforts or not, his action is a deserved recognition of the Auburn man that will win cordial approval in this section of the state.

On rare occasions General Carranza displays something that seems remarkably like sound discretion and good sense. He has released the colored American troopers which his men captured in the ambush at Carrizal, complying rather more promptly than is his wont with the demands made by the United States. The bigger issue, however, that of his future attitude regarding the right of the United States to protect itself and its citizens by any means that it may be forced to use, is still hanging in the balance. And as an element with which to dicker, we strongly suspect that will prove to be a short-lived resource with the de facto president.

The Indiana state republican organization has sent to Colonel Roosevelt a touching telegram of thankful appreciation of his action in coming over to the support of Mr. Hughes. Doubtless before investing in loving cups or other testimonials more expensive than a telegram, the Indiana republicans held it to be the part of financial discretion to wait until the votes are counted in November.

The recent appointment of a lieutenant of police at Indianapolis has been followed by a shock of pained surprise, and then by the cry that the new appointee has never been an avowed politician. Can it be that Indianapolis is beginning to make official selections on the basis of merit and fitness for the job rather than on that of political pull?

Figures given out from the office of the city building inspector show that building construction in Fort Wayne for the first six months of 1916, aggregates more than one and one-half millions of dollars, and is $700,000 in excess of the total for the same period last year. Fort Wayne is marching splendidly on and simply will not halt.

"Then He Hit Me There!"

MOBILIZATION IS WORTH WHILE.

(Indinapolis Star.)

The mobilization of the National Guard will be worth all it costs in time, effort and money even if Mexican developments should make it unnecessary for the guardsmen to fire a single shot. We have recently amended our laws so as to make the state troops a part of the reserve forces of the regular army. It it is important that those reserves should have actual experience in responding to an emergency. They are getting that practice now and it will be valuable.

One of the strongest arguments put forth by those who opposed the law to federalize the National Guard, instead of providing for a larger regular army with a national reserve, was that the state troops are units without co-ordination. A general mobilization, such as is in progress, serves to bring out the difficulties that are in the way of getting the forces of the states together. Problems are being solved and proficiency attained that mean much for all time.

It might be worth while to have general mobilization at intervals even when no foreign trouble is threatened. Details may be mapped out on paper and learned in theory, but nothing counts like actual practice. If the National Guard is to be the army's reserve force, in emergencies, it is entitled to know just what and how it is supposed to do. That can be learned most effectively from such movements as the one called into being by the Mexican complication.

AIN'T NATURE WONDERFUL?

Unnatural History, by Eugene Ahern.

THE PARROT.

Barbers are the A-No. 1 reporters. Talk about "scoops," why, they can pick up more news of any kind in five minutes without leaving the shop than four and twenty newspapermen could find in a month.

In the olden times, which was a long time ago, when Bryan first ran for president, besides being barbers they were surgeons. Haven't you noticed after you get a shave that there was something about your face that made you think they would make good surgeons? We have a little memento on the port side of our nose that will remind us of the fact for life.

If you spent an hour shampooing the moss on your "derby chair" and then went into the parrot's shop he'd say "Would you like a shampoo? I see your hair is very oily and dusty"—just like that.

RAIL BROTHERHOODS SET OUT POSITION

Statement Seeks to Make Attitude of Employes Clear to Public.

Cleveland, O., July 1.—In an effort to make their position clear to the public, the transportation brotherhoods have issued the following statement relative to the conference between the employes' committee and the railway managers, recently held in New York city.

The employes' committee met the railway managers' committee and presented their demands for an eight-hour workday with a penalty for overtime of time and a half pay.

The managers' committee refused to grant these demands and did not submit any definite counter-proposition to the employes.

The managers did discuss what they termed a "tentative proposal," which did not take into consideration the plain fact that freight train crews are piece workers and they are paid to perform a certain definite service of moving a train from one end of a division to the other and when they have performed this piece work they have done what they were paid to do regardless of whether it was done in less than eight hours.

What the men want is a chance to perform this piece work in all cases in eight hours or less.

Having no penalty for the use of overtime, the railroad companies now use the men continuously from twelve to twenty hours.

The interstate commerce commission has no authority under the law to regulate wages of employes any more than it has to regulate the price of steel rails and other supplies purchased by the railroad companies. Therefore, any investigation made by the interstate commerce commission into the subject of wages would come to naught, for the reason that the commission has no power to settle the matter.

Under the Newlands arbitration law, it is distinctly provided that arbitration can be set in operation "when a strike is threatened."

No man has a right to say that a "strike is threatened" until the result of the strike vote, now being taken, is ascertained. The will of the employes must be known before a strike can be threatened.

If the interstate commerce commission would assume the responsibility of agreeing that the demands of the men should be met, it would clearly be up to the commission to provide the means for meeting any increased cost of operation.

The railways, of course, would like to put the interstate commerce commission under this obligation to grant increased freight rates.

If it is right and proper for the freight train employes to go into an arbitration as to whether they shall be worked excessive hours and as to what they shall sell their labor for, then it would only be consistent for the railway car and engine buildings and railway supply dealers to agree to arbitrate with the railroads as to the price the railroads should pay for these things.

The principal objection, however, of the employes to arbitration would be on the ground of the inability to secure impartial arbitrators who were sufficiently acquainted with the technicalities of a problem of this kind.

In a previous arbitration between the employes and the companies, the man who was acting as neutral arbitrator was a corporation lawyer representing large vested interests, owners of railroad securities and who had appeared in numerous cases as attorney of record for the Standard Oil company.

FIVE ARE DEAD IN ELECTRICAL STORM

Central Indiana Folk Victims of Lightning Friday Afternoon.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 1.—Five persons are dead and one injured as a result of a severe electrical storm which swept central Indiana late yesterday afternoon. Three of the persons were killed in Marion county. Two of them were boys. The other two dead live at Rushville and near Fowler. Lightning caused the death of three. The dead are:

Raymon Bray, 13, 1003 Hosbrook street, Indianapolis; Fred Kelly, 14, Beech Grove, Marion county; an unidentified man on Rockville road, near White Lick, Marion county; Dennis Brummitt, 22, laborer, near Fowler; Mrs. Elsie Kelso, widow, Rushville, Ind.; William Hacker, laborer, near Columbus, Ind.

Lightning set fire to the grain elevator of the Indianapolis Elevator company, but the loss was small. A heavy wind accompanied the storm and did considerable damage to crops. A number of buildings in Rushville and Columbus were struck by lightning.

Young Bray was electrocuted when he grasped a telephone wire which had broken and fallen across a trolley wire during the storm. Kelly was attempting to drive a horse into a barn at his home when struck. His body was found after the storm by a younger brother. Brummitt was driving a wagon load of stone. He and his team were killed. The wagon was destroyed and the stone scattered. The lightning tore a large hole in the ground at the spot.

Mrs. Kelso saw the lightning strike the residence of James Hendricks across the street from her home. She ran out of her house screaming and dropped dead in the street. The Hendricks dwelling was destroyed.

Hacker was working in the Reeves Pulley works at Columbus when it was struck. None of the other workmen were injured. His condition is serious.

WILSON CAN DO LITTLE.

Pleas for Clemency for Casement Still Pouring In.

Washington, July 1.—Petitions requesting that President Wilson urge the British government to grant clemency to Sir Roger Casement, the Irish revolutionist, poured into the white house today from many parts of the country. It is generally understood that the United States can do no more than bring such petitions to the attention of Great Britain in an informal and unofficial manner.

WAR WITH MEXICO AS A LAST RESORT ONLY

President Makes Position Clear in Press Club Address.

New York, July 1.—President Wilson made it plain in his speech at the New York Press club banquet last night that he will not countenance a war with Mexico until there is no other alternative for settling the border troubles.

Again he declared that he was ready to sacrifice his own political fortunes in order to carry out his convictions as to what would be the course to pursue in the situation.

The president's audience, composed of newspaper men, state and political leaders and others prominent in public life, signified their endorsement of his position by repeated outbursts of applause. When he asked if the glory of America would be enhanced by a war of conquest in Mexico, shouts of "No" came from all parts of the banquet hall. A similar response was made to his query whether it is America's duty to "carry self-defense to the point of dictation into the affairs of another people."

The president dwelt also in his efforts to serve the whole people, thousands of whom, he said, are appealing to him to maintain peace as long as possible.

"I have constantly to remind myself," he said, "that I am not the servant of those who wish to enhance the value of their Mexican investments, but that I am the servant of the rank and file of the people of the United States."

POLICE ARE PROBING EXPLOSION ON TRAIN

Oakland, Cal., July 1.—Police today began the investigation of an explosion in the smoking car of a westbound Southern Pacific train near here last night, which blew a big hole in the steel roof and caused injuries to eight persons.

W. H. Brooks, conductor of the train, reported to the police that three Mexicans boarded the train at Elmira, Cal., with tickets for Richmond, a town near this city. Two of them, he said, left the trin at Richmond. Shortly before reaching the station here he found the third one in the wash room.

This third Mexican, the conductor said, left the train as soon as it stopped, and the explosion came a few minutes later. Police Inspector Charles McCarthy, of the Oakland police department, said that in his opinion the explosive was gun powder.

NEW DIVISION IN POSTAL SERVICE

Will Have Supervision of Handling City and Town Mails.

Washington, July 1.—A new division in the postoffice department, to be known as the division of postoffice service, with entire supervision over the handling and movement of the mails in every city and town in the United States, was created today. The change was provided by a recent act of congress.

The new division absorbs the divisions of city delivery, and salaries and allowances and that part of the division of miscellaneous transportations relating to the mail mesenger, pneumatic tube and screen wagon service. The change is expected to result in improved mail service as well as in the elimination of confusion which had resulted from the division of executive authority over related postal functions.

The new division is in charge of Goodwin D. Ellsworth, of North Carolina, assisted by William S. Ryan, of New York, former heads of divisions abolished. They will have under them more than 100,000 employes scattered throughout the country, and will supervise the disbursement of more than $150,000,000 annually.

PROJECT PLANS FOR DAM IN ST. JOSEPH

River Improvement Subject Before Gathering of Farmers.

At a meeting held Friday night at the Commercial club, looking to the work of making the St. Joe river more beautiful and called by William Breuer, fifty farmers were in attendance. They reside along the river north of the city, and among their number was George Jaap, who spoke in favor of a dam for the river.

Farmers Were Present.

People of Clarksville are at the present time planning a dam, Mr. Jaap asserted, that would converge the river, Hamilton lake and other bodies of water in order that 12 miles from the St. Joe to the Maumee would be under water. Mr. Jaap declared the farmers should dam the river before some one else beat the mto it. Many of the farmers, who attended the meeting, expressed enthusiasm and pledged co-operation in the belief that the damming of the river would be not only a mark of beautification but an asset to them. Mr. Breuer said the river could be made one of the most beautiful, and that the proposed action regarding the dam would bring about adequate boating, bathing or skating facilities.

Meeting Friday Night

Another meeting will be held Friday night at Germania park, at which John Bleke will act as chairman. All farmers interested in the project or living near the river will be in attendance at this meeting, it is predicted. Mr. Breuer will at this time present his plans more fully to the farmers. Committees from the Commercial, Rotary and the Real Estate exchanges are working with Br. Breuer. A total of $40,000 would be expended in damming the river and making improvements in the way of boat houses, beautiful banks and pavilions. Following the next meeting Mr. Breuer will set his committees to work toward the actual construction of the dam.

Society

The benefit bridge for the Relief Union, held this afternoon in the Anthony hotel, was as brilliant a social event as has taken place in recent weeks. The ballroom where the tables were laid for bridge, was decorated in a Japanese garden effect, with lattices of pink and white flowers. Many large baskets with tall handles were filled with roses, lilies and other garden flowers of the season, and they made fragrant and beautiful spots of color everywhere. The handles of all the baskets and everything else possible to use in a decorative way, were entwined with rambler rases and vines. Japanese lanterns hung on either side of the space built to accommodate musicians who play for dancing and outside the entrance to the ballroom very large standing baskets were filled with tall white garden flowers. Many compliments were passed on to the decorating committee who worked long and hard to obtain the charming result. The flowers were all donated. On one side of the room were prizes for winners in the game and many corsage-bouquets were ready to be presented to all who took part in a program of beautiful music and the interpretative and artistic dancing by Miss Olds between games. The musical program was given by Miss Kay Spencer, Miss Lucile Vail, Miss Irene Miller, Miss Emil Verweire, Mrs. C. A. Horton and Miss Marguerite Neff. Four hundred tickets were sold for the party and there was a large attendance of players and also of people who displayed interest by calling late in the afternoon. A refreshing punch was the only thing served. Mrs. Mary Keel, Mrs. E. H. McDonald, Mrs. J. N. Study, Mrs. Edward O'Rourke and Mrs. Isaac d'Isay were the receiving committee. There was much generosity manifested on every side by people who desired to help this project along and merchants and florists donated of their goods and ladies of their time in an unstinted manner. Prize winners were allowed to take their own choice of the six gifts, which were also donations, in order of their scores, so that there was a feeling of fairness and informality well, that contributed to the prevail- good spirit of the benefit. Socially party was a genuine delight.

CAMP RALSTON WILL BE A MECCA SUNDAY

Indianapolis, July 1.—Thousands of citizens from many parts of the state are expected to visit Camp Ralston at Fort Benjamin Harrison, tomorrow, and, in anticipation of their coming, preparations were begun at the camp yesterday to handle a record crowd for an Indiana military camp. Excursions are to be run from a few of the towns represented by companies in the camp.

Col. A. L. Kuhlman, commander of the camp, yesterday ordered a guard of 150 men to be retailed to assist in keeping the roads open for traffic and to have charge of information stations for the benefit of relatives and friends seeking to find a particular soldier. Capt. Carl F. Beyer, commander of Company H, third regiment, will be in charge of the guard.

Will Direct Parking.

The guardsmen will direct the parking of automobiles and other vehicles and in other ways seek to keep traffic open. An even larger crowd than was present last Sunday, when the visitors were estimated at 10,000, is expected, but it is believed that with an active guard the crush experienced on the roads last Sunday will be avoided.

There will be little change tomorrow in the daily program except that time will be allowed for the soldiers to visit their friends. Visitors last Sunday experienced much difficulty in finding their friends in the big camp, but it is believed that the establishment of an information bureau will be an aid to them tomorrow.

Private Develops Typhoid.

Private Albert Zentz, 20 years old, Company F (South Bend), Third regiment, developed a case of typhoid fever yesterday and was removed from the field hospital, Camp Ralston, to the City Hospital, Indianapolis. He was feeling bad when he reached the camp a week ago, but did not go to the field hospital until three days ago. He received the anti-typhoid vaccination last Monday along with his comrades, but too late to avoid the attack of fever then coming on him. Relatives of Zentz at South Bend, were notified of his illness.

Testaments Are Distributed.

The Indianapolis Church Federation yesterday began the distribution of small testaments among the soldiers.

All the members of the three Indianapolis infantry companies and the Indianapolis battery are now mustered in the United States army. Company C, First regiment, commanded by Capt. Shirley, received the oath yesterday morning. The mustering in of the artillery battalion was completed yesterday when the oath was administered to battery C, of Lafayette, commanded by Capt. Brockenbrough.

The finest literature that reaches Camp Ralston is represented in the letters which come to the soldiers from their home towns. There isn't a line in the most popular newspaper or magazine which measures up to a sentence found in the hundreds—the thousands—of letters which are pouring into the camp from mothers, fathers, wives and sweethearts.

Postmaster Springsteen, of Indianapolis, went to the rescue of the camp postmaster yesterday when he agreed to provide a horse and wagon to haul mail pouches between Fort Benjamin Harrison and the camp. About fifteen big bags of mail are being received in camp each day. Persons writing to the soldiers should be sure to designate the company and the regiment to which the addressee belongs to make sure of prompt delivery.

Col. Kuhlman, commanding officer of Camp Ralston, received a letter in camp yesterday from Governor Ralston in which he expressed his appreciation of the honor done him in naming the camp for him.

Governor Appreciates Honor.

"While I am aware that the naming of the Indiana soldiers' camps in honor of the incumbent governor in time of active service has been the uniform custom, yet it was but a custom and carried with it no legal or moral obligation," wrote the governor. "I therefore appreciate the courtesy as something more than an empty honor. I prize it as not only a gracious personal compliment, but also as a mark of respect to the executive office, and as indicating something of the feeling of loyalty to the country and to those having serious responsibility in these troublous times; and so, I thank you for yourself and for the people of Indiana, whom you honor by your service and your sacrifice."

Lieut. Coy. George W. Freyermuth, Third regiment, whose home is at South Bend, was much pleased yesterday with a letter he received telling of the action of the Rotary club, of South Bend, in raising a fund to be given to company F, Third regiment, composed of South Bend men.

"This fund, which already has reached more than $500, no doubt will remind our boys that we at home are thinking of their patriotism and will do our part toward making their life as comfortable as possible," wrote E. T. Bonds, secretary of the South Bend club.

WAR TALK DOESN'T WORRY THE KIDDIES OF THE WAR SECRETARY.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

COOL AND QUAINT FROCK

THE all-white frock has come to be an essential addition to the wardrobe While it may not be any cooler than the colored frock, it has the appearance of being so, and that helps a great deal in hot weather.

The charm of this frock lies in its simplicity. It is made of white crepe di chine and trimmed with ruffles of white taffeta, each one neatly hemstitched The first ruffle is cleverly applied to give the effect of a peplum—a note which is paramount just at present. A sash of taffeta weighted with white crocheted balls, gives the frock the appearance of a coat dress. White pearl buttons down either side of the silk vest are the sole trimming of the blouse. A white Georgette crepe collar starts out in front to be very narrow, but as it wends its way down the back it broadens considerably and doesn't stop short until it reaches the waist line.

SURPLICE TOP TO A CHEMISE

A CHEMISE that may be developed from either a fine cotton material or from one of the many lingerie silks can have a very low surplice top as in the drawing shown today. The girl who makes her own lingerie will appreciate this diversion from the regular type of chemise. This may have the ribbon run thru the eyelets, as pictured, or the ribbon and eyelets may be omitted, making the chemise a straight affair, to be gathered in by the petticoat. A fine nainsook would make a charming and cool chemise from this design. The chief charm lies in the way the dotted embroidery has been managed.

The bottom of the chemise has been carved at the sides in the manner in which many separate drawers or combinations are finished. This may be either a straight chemise, or it may be provided with an envelope flap to do double duty. The ruffling is batiste with a solid embroidered dot. Indeed, one could procure an edging like this with a dot of color and then make the chemise from a batiste to match the color of the dot. This ruffle can be hemstitched on to give a better finish and to save time and trouble. The top is made surplice simply by cutting the neck in a deep V, and making one side of the shaped embroidery piece extend into the chemise to simulate the surplice crossing. Hemstitching again here will give a pretty finish. Tucks hold the fullness in at the waist line, if the ribbon and eyelets are to be used.

A practical feature about this chemise is that because of its excellent fit at the neck, and because of the deepness of the V, it needs no beading or ribbon runners to hold it in place, and every girl knows what a saving this is.

DIMITY SPREADS

EVERY effort is made nowadays to make one's bedroom appear as cool as possible during the heat of summer. One of the latest means for carrying out this motive is a dimity spread. It is not only light in weight, thereby being easier to handle, but it is made up in pretty striped effects. One can select a stripe to match the color used in one's room. The background of all of the spreads of this type is white.

SOME INDISPENSABLE KITCHEN UTENSILS

THE handiest way and the quickest is what we are all looking for these days. If in your kitchen you have not an egg separator, by all means get one. They are about the shape of a coffee strainer, and when the egg is broken the yolk stays in the center and the white of the egg slips thru to any receptacle you may have ready. Then there is an apple corer which is divided in eight different parts. When the apple is pared press the corer over the top and the core is removed and the apple separated. Measuring spoons are always useful. They start with a quarter of a teaspoon size and run on up to a tablespoon. These are all fastened together, which makes them very handy.

THE STAY-AT-HOME PORCH

THE latter part of July and the whole of August usually saw the Jones family away—after a fashion. They usually went to a farm, where they took two rooms—a small, rather stuffy one to which Mr. Jones could rush when he arrived amid the rural peace at 6.5[illegible] and make a frenzied toilet for dinner served promptly at 7. The other room was usually a little larger, and in it three cots were crowded to hold Marie and Helen and Patty. The Joneses didn't like the idea of washing in well water out of basins and a lot of other things about the various farms they visited annually, but they had come almost philosophically to accept it as a part of the penalty of "being away." The plans had all been laid for another summer of this sort, when the doctor announced that Mr. Jones shouldn't and mustn't run for trains thru the hot summer and swelter thru a two-hour train ride daily.

"He'll be all right if he gets home at half-past 4 or 5, has a comfortable place to rest and is kept cheerful," said the doctor. "If not he'll go to smash—nervous prostration."

So the trunks were carried back upstairs, and Mrs. Jones set out to make the porch, which faced a tiny lawn and then the street, "a comfortable place to rest," realizing the value of open air.

Restful, cheerful colors—the color of nature arrayed for the summer festival—were her choice.

From the living room, seldom used during the hot months, she brought low wicker chairs and rockers, as well as a wicker couch. The dull blue of the country sky furnished the inspiration for the cushions and runners for the chairs; the lush green of the meadows was a cool note represented by the wash rug that covered the floor. Bits of graceful yellow pottery lent color and cheerfulness to the magazine table and cool blue-striped awnings shut out rushing, perspiring humanity. A dickie bird in a white-enameled cage with blue trimmings incessantly proclaimed that he was glad to sing for his living.

Here on hot summer afternoons the tinkle of iced drinks mingled with the smoke of Jones' good cigars, for he suddenly found that he could get home as early as 4 o'clock if he made the effort. And he quickly found that he wanted to.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

Blue Slip

Is it passe to wear a light blue slip under a white net dress? I have been told it wasn't the style this summer. M. K.

To Clean Satin

Is there any way that I could clean satin that is very soiled? I would like to do it myself, as I do not want to go to the expense of having it cleaned. Mrs. L. M.

Pour 1½ teaspoonfuls of kerosene into three quarts of soapsuds, and let the satin soak in it one or two hours. Then dip it up and down repeatedly in clean warm water that has been made soapy, and then rinse well by moving it up and down in clear warm water. Press it when it is nearly dry.

Every detail of the many interesting events—from the very beginning to the end—from the song service on Sunday, at the pageant grounds, properly dedicating the stage for what was to come; the enormous and enthusiastic gathering of twenty thousand people, out to see what it all looked like, and to hear the chorus of one thousand voices. Following in regular order every event of importance on the week's program, the floral parade, showing all those beautifully decorated automobiles, the equal of anything of its kind ever shown anywhere; the fraternal parade, showing all the various Fort Wayne organizations out in their best regalia, the fine representation of Moose headed by the famous Mooseheart band, the Elks, the Catholic societies, etc.

The beautiful scene of the children's exercises on Wayne street, a scene unequaled anywhere in picture, showing the immense crowd viewing the exercises. If you were there you're in the movie picture. If you were not there you missed one of the greatest sights offered during the whole centennial week.

Here's Your Chance.

The interesting entertainment given by the society ladies of Fort Wayne, dressed in their ancestors' gowns, showing dresses hundreds of years old, styles of all periods of the last two hundred years. An event interesting and instructive to everybody, and which few had the good fortune to see.

And the Pageant.

That wonderful production, the equal of which has never been produced, is beautifully shown, grouped artistically for movie reproduction; all the important scenes brought out vividly and distinctly.

A Scene Long to Be Remembered by All Those Who See It.

In fact the pageant is wonderfully reproduced by able hands and Fort Wayne is fortunate that she is to be presented with a copy of this 7-reel film picture, to be used in years to come, to show future generations what the old folks did in 1916. Showing at the Palace theater beginning July 4th.

LASALLE COMPANY TO CLOSE

Three more performances and the New Palace will close for the season, to open August 20, when the regular 1916-1917 vaudeville season will start. The Lasalle Musical Comedy company will finish its four weeks' engagement in "My Cinderella Girl," the happy little college farce built on one of George Fitch's famous Siwash stories, in which the college hero does all the athletic tricks, such as winning ball games in the ninth inning and kidding the faculty, father and freshies without fear or favor. It is a merry bunch of nonsense, with plenty of dancing numbers for the nimble-footed chorus and with some eccentricities, among them being a fool dance in which dainty Grace Edler dodges Al Wilson's feet as much as possible. Guy Voyer and Harrie Lee have particularly gay roles in this comedy, roles that serve them as outlets for their merry spirits.

It was intended closing the engagement with one day of the farce comedy, Lovers and Lunatics, but this plan had to be abandoned because of the serious illness of Miss Minnie Pillard, who has the principal feminine comedy role in this diversion. Miss Pillard submitted to an operation at the Hope hospital yesterday and will be confined to the institution for a week or more, rejoining the company at Indianapolis.

MAN WHO WANTED TO DIE GOES TO JAIL

Charles Wenzel, laborer, 2306 Fairfield avenue, wanted to die Friday night because his sweetheart in Michigan had gone back on him, he said. He wandered along West Berry street, looking for something to kill himself with. He muttered to himself and wept aloud at thoughts of his unrequited love. People on the street watched him for several minutes. Somebody called the police.

To the officer who accosted him Wenzel handed a note. "Give this to her for me," he said, and tears coursed down his cheeks.

"To whom?" asked the patrolman.

"To my girl in Michigan," and Wenzel moaned and pulled his hair.

Wenzel and the note were taken to the station. The note read, "When you get this I will be gone."

The officer said, "Maybe he meant he would be gone to jail."

Wenzel says he has lived in Fort Wayne three years. He said in municipal court Saturday that he had been drinking the day before. He does not want to die anymore, he told Judge Kerr. His trial is set for July 4, and he is held under $200 bond.

Two Held to Circuit Court.

Burt Ward and Melvin Hoehlen, both charged with assaulting small girls, were bound over to the circuit court. Ward, who is said to have been an inmate of an asylum for several years, confessed in court to having assaulted a seven-year-old girl. He was bound over to higher court and his bond fixed at $2,000.

Hoehlen is charged with attacking a fourteen-year-old girl several days ago. The girl was badly bruised in her struggles with the man, the testimony revealed. Hoehlen was held to the circuit court under $1,000 bond.

Ed Worden Sentenced.

Ed Worden, 25, laborer, who was arrested on his birthday, last Tuesday, when he was found trying to persuade a thirteen-year-old girl to go with him to Robison park, was fined $50 and costs and sentenced to 30 days at the state farm for attempting to influence a girl of tender years.

Other Police Court.

Pat Burns, who had said he wanted to be arrested when told to be quiet in a Main street saloon Friday evening, was given another chance. He came near a costly mistake when he mechanically nodded his year "Yes" in answer to Judge Kerr's question, "Do you think policemen are jokes?"

Matthew Degan and Edward Morris, colored, were fined $5 and costs for begging on the streets. Joseph Seiney, charged with intoxication, was released.

Jack Underwood, 224 East Main street, arrested several days ago on a charge of speeding on his motorcycle through a school zone, was released after a severe lecture. Underwood, who is fourteen years old and a newsboy, was turned out because he is virtually the only support of his mother.

Joseph Tarocwicz, charged with assaulting Officer Buuck two weeks ago when Buuck is said to have found Tarocwicz in the act of entering a building over the rear roof, was sentenced to ninety days at the state farm and fined $25 and costs. In the conflict between Buuck and Tarocwicz the officer shot and wounded his assailant.

John Slattery, 30, convicted on a drunk charge, will be held in jail until after the Fourth of July. "I am afraid you might not be strong enough to resist the tempation of the great holiday," Kerr told him. He is held under $25 bond.

Case of Frank Fordham, charged with child neglect, was continued until July 15. The case of William Ford, charged with wife desertion, was dismissed on request of the wife who begged another chance for the husband. Charles Banks and George Reese, charged with loitering, will be tried on July 3. Bond was fixed at $100.

Edward Burns and Amos Marks, accused of taking an active part in violence committed in connection with the Western Gas company strike, will be tried July 3. They are held under peace bond.

NEW AGENT HERE.

T. C. Inasmuch as Mr. Henry leaves Sunday for a two weeks' vacation, Mr. Cravens returned to Lafayette Saturday afternoon.

WOMAN'S VOICE CONTROLS BIG BEASTS—ELEPHANTS ARE IN THE POWER OF MME. ZORA OF SELLS-FLOTO CIRCUS.

Mme. Zora and Snyder the Tusker.

Mme. Zora, the greatest of all elephant trainers, and her special pet, Snyder the Tusker, a beast of unusual intelligence, will be an attraction at the Sells-Floto circus when it comes to Fort Wayne, July 13. Mme. Zora has a strange power over her huge pets and they seem to understand her very language.

The combined Sells-Floto and Buffalo Bill Wild West show this year surpasses any other attempt ever made by showmen.

Critics of the big-top attractions have called it "the champion show of the world." It has performers from every civilized country on earth, with sensational acts and features entirely new even to the resourceful minds of showmen.

Forty-two double length cars are required to transport the big equipment of the Sells-Floto show from place to place. This year the circus will carry 1,000 persons and horses without number. There are three herds of elephants and many new species of animals have been added to the zoo, which is the best in the country.

There will be a great street parade the morning of show day.

The Greatest Time and Money Saver

We think of railroads, telephones, the telegraph, the wireless—but how about want ads?

They are in the same class. It used to be when a man wanted help he had to ask among his friends where he could get a good stenographer, bookkeeper, etc. TODAY he puts in a want ad and tomorrow he has only to choose from a dozen or more.

He has furniture to sell—a want ad brings many buyers.

He has a house to rent—a want ad rents it—he has a house to sell—a want ad sells it.

CHANGES PROMISED IN SHOP LEAGUE

Bowser Rooters at Today's Game With Band and Much Enthusiasm.

Several changes in the percentage column are promised after today's games in the Fort Wayne Industrial league. The leaders have been running away with things and it will not be at all surprising if they are stopped. The Bowsers meet the Turners and the Westerns will do battle with the Fort Wayne Electric Works. Both the Bowsers and Western baseballers are tied for first place. If today's game the Bowser rooters will have a band and the biggest crowd of the season is promised. The assignment of players and umpires is announced as follows by Secretary J. O. Goff:

Games will be started in all contests promptly at 3 o'clock.

Columbus, Ind., July 1.—The Columbus baseball team has lost Ed Dugan, [illegible] and Elser, a pitcher, who have been doing mound duty for some time. Both have signed with the Peru team. Ross Hewes, who hurled at one time in the Federal league, has been signed as a new twirler here. He will do his work in the box Sunday when the locals take on the Frankfort independent team.

KENDALLVILLE REDS HERE ON THE FOURTH

Two Games Scheduled at League Park Tuesday Afternoon.

The Kendallville Reds will cross bats with Mart Cleary's team at League park at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the Fourth. Big Murray will do mound duty for the Reds. He is touted as the Walter Johnson of semi-professional ball.

As a preliminary to the big game the Badger Juniors and the South Side Eagles will play, the game starting at 1 o'clock. These are two of the fastest 15-year-old teams in the city, and the game will not only interest the big crowd of youngsters, who will be admitted free, but will take many of the old fans back to the days of real sport. The kid teams are hot rivals and a real battle will be staged.

The management of the Fort Wayne team has designated the Fourth as boys' day and all of them under 16 years of age will be admitted without charge.

PLANS REGIMENT OF ATHLETE SOLDIERS

St. Louis, July 1.—Thomas G. Watts, of St. Louis, head of the Western Association of the Amateur Athletic union, suggests the formation of an A. A. U. regiment to fight the Mexicans. He would enroll athletes and officials of the A. A. U. and send the entire regiment into camp as soon as possible to be among the first to answer the call to duty.

Watts' general idea is mighty fine.

He asks for three companies from New York, two from New England, one middle Atlantic, two central and one or two from the Pacific coast.

"I feel confident every athlete in the United States would respond at once," said Watts. "Athletes in the middle west are enthusiastic about their chances fighting the Mexicans. Let the boys enlist and you can rest assured the A. A. U. will cut a big swathe on the firing line."

(By Harold Johnson.)

A universal uniform consisting of a cream colored shirt of thin material, light flannel trousers and white tennis shoes sufficed for the men players gathered from all quarters of the United States, but milady refused to forsake fashion's dictates. Some even clung to fashionable hats.

Miss Martha Guthrie, of Pittsburg, wore a broad black sailor hat trimmed with cherries, with white skirt and waist in her early matches, then regretfully forsook the headgear when she met Miss Buda Stephens, of Toledo, later in the tourney.

Miss Florence Rudolph was attired in a green and white striped hat with wide drooping brim, white skirt and silk shirtwaist, white shoes and stockings. Miss Bjurstedt mowed down all rivals while wearing a plain dark colored sleeveless vest that she had knitted herself while waiting for her turn on the courts. Her skirt and waist are of the plainest kind.

As in the tournaments in which she has competed Miss Bjurstedt carried too many guns for her opponents, her closest matches being with Miss Florence Ballin, of New York, and Miss Guthrie.

Among the chief surprises in the men's competition was the playing of C. B. Doyle, of Washington, who defeated George M. Church, and the work of Willis E. Davis, of California.

FORT WAYNE HAS HARD GAME SUNDAY

Mart Cleary's Fort Wayne players are taking Sunday's game seriously. While they are confident of winning—they are always confident, for that matter—they appreciate that they are up against one of the fastest baseball teams in northern Indiana.

Although the locals started bad, they are now going great. The weak places have been strengthened and they now look upon themselves as the best independent aggregation in the state.

The Auburn team is coming with a strong line-up, headed by Walter Scott, a pitcher who tried out with the Boston Americans. The team is said to be strong in all departments. The game will be the first of a series of three to be staged. Ladies will be admitted free.

CHURCH AND MATHEY DEFEAT COAST TEAM

Cleveland, O., July 1.—The east triumphed over the west when George M. Church, of Tenafly, N. J., and Dean Mathey, of Cranford, N. J., former Princeton team, retained the clay courts doubles championship of the United States by defeating Willis E. Davis and Harold Vandyke Johns, of San Francisco, 7—5, 6—0, 6—2, in the challenge round of doubles.

The champions more than lived up to their reputations. Church, in particular, played spectacular tennis. His exhibition at the net bordered on the sensational. Mathey played well considering he has not been on the courts as much as Church this season. The Californians performed cleverly in the first set, but from then on were erratic.

Doyle vs. McElroy for Title.

Conrad B. Doyle, of the Columbia Country club of Washington, D. C., reached the final round in men's singles by defeating William McElroy, of Pittsburg, 6—3, 6—3, 7—5.

Doyle's opponent in the final round will be Willis E. Davis. This match, which will be played tomorrow, will be for the national singles championship, as R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia, 1915 champion, will not defend his title.

Tennis Fans Cheer Soldiers.

The championship doubles match was interrupted three times when troop trains carrying the national guard from various eastern states passed within a short distance of the courts. The fans in the stands stood up and cheered wildly as the soldiers passed en route to the Mexican border.

WATCH DUNDEE TRAIN.

EVANS IS VICTOR IN GOLF TOURNAMENT

Minneapolis, Minn., July 1.—Giving the greatest exhibition ever staged in a national open champion, Charles Evans, jr., of Chicago, won the annual classic with a card of 286. Even with this record breaking total, he was closely pressed!, Jack Hutchinson, of Pittsburg, finishing only two strokes behind.

Evans' win was a popular one, as all of the spectators were pulling for him to win, although there were hot local favorites like Sargent and Vardon playing in the profesional ranks. His morning and afternoon rounds were followed by the largest galleries of the day, although J. M. Barnes, the Whitemarsh professional, closest to Evans at the start of the final round, also drew a large gallery.

Evans had scored 139 yesterday and went out and in in an aggregate of 74, taking one stroke less in the final round for a total of 147 for the day.

There were lower scores made on every round, but Evans won by his steadiness and ability to pick up after troublesome holes.

Jack Hutchinson, who scored 148 yesterday, made the thirty-six holes in 72 and 68, respectively, the afternoon score lowering the course record. When Hutchinson came in it was thought that J. M. Barnes was to lead the professionals, but Hutchinson crowded the entire gallery of pros down a notch until it required a 207 or better to get the money. The scores of the amateurs were not taken into consideration in making up the profesional money list.

LAST OF THE THREE EVENTS PLAYED TODAY

Much interest is being manifested in the outcome of the Pidgeon-Ralston affair in the last of the three spring golf tournaments—the M. C. MacDougal, S. S. Fisher and B. Paul Mossman events—played at the Fort Wayne Country club today. The line-up was as follows:

C. H. Pidgeon vs. William Ralston, in the MacDougal tourney; James M. Barrett vs. B. Paul Mossan, in the Fisher tourney; F. Shoaff vs. P. C. Enninger, in the Mossman tourney.

The play will be over the 36-hole route in each case. The contests were started this morning and the first eighteen hole were played before the noon hour.

FRED RUSSELL HANGS UP VERY SPEEDY MILE

Indianapolis, July 1—Fred Russell, 2:04, has just stepped a mile in 2:07¼ over the Indianapolis track, it being the fastest reported during the present season. Harry Hersey, the man who drove Dan Patch to the world's mark of 1:55¼, was up with the horse. Fred Russell has been entered in the $5,000 board of commerce stake at Detroit and in several other events which make fast time for the Grand circuit this year. The early showing of Fred Russell marks him as a contender for the money on the "once around" the present season.

The performance of Fred Russell is the fastest reported in any of the training camps this setason.

BOOZE WILL AGAIN BE NIPPER'S THEME

Evangelist Says He Will Hit Traffic "Between the Eyes."

SOME NIPPERISMS IN TABLOID FORM

A lot of people are blaming God for some things in their lives when the fact is they are reaping what they have sown.

David sowed the seed of lust, murder and rebellion and reaped a whirlwind harvest of all of them.

When you hear a little boy swear, you are listening to the harvest of somebody's sowing.

If you skin a man in a horse trade you must expect to get skinned.

Eve sowed the seed of disobedience and reaped a harvest of it in Cain. Jacob sowed the seed of deceit and reaped a harvest of it in his own children.

One unkind word is liable to bring a harvest of unkindness.

Just as the "rum bunch" starts to crawl to its feet after the great Fourth of July temperance rally, Rev. J. A. Nipper will step forward and once more lay out the booze demon by a blow between the eyes, with his famous sermon on "Booze," it was announced at the tent meeting on West Main street Friday night. The sermon which Rev. Nipper says will be a "for sure walloper," will be delivered Wednesday night and will be Nippers' second attack on the liquor traffic in his tent campaign for souls in Fort Wayne.

Traveling men are especially invited to the Sunday afternoon meeting which will be addressed by "Doc" Lane, the well-known traveling salesman and speaker of reputation. The session which is open to everybody will be of special interest to the men who spend their days and nights "on the road."

"The Man of Choice" is the subject upon which Rev. Nipper will talk Saturday night. Sunday night his subject will be "The Judgment Day." There will be no meeting on Tuesday as all the forces will be joined in the temperance rally planned for Lakeside park on the Fourth.

The tent was well filled Friday night. There was tumultous applause after the members of "the preachers' row" had made harmony with one stanza of the beautiful song "Sweeter As the Days Go By." The Rev. F. H. Tornmohlen, pastor of the Friend's church in Van Wert, Ohio, led in prayer. The offertory prayer was made by the Rev. E. E. Howe, of the Tabernacle Baptist church.

The sermon based upon the well-known words, "Whatsoever ye sow that shall ye reap," followed. Rev. Nipper literally burned the power of the text into the hearts of his hearers. Homely illustrations of sunflowers and morning glories, told in his characteristic way, brought out the natural results of physical seed sowing. All the anguish of misspent lives and the glory of right living were gathered into vivid word pictures to show the harvest of thoughts and deeds.

The audience sat entranced as it followed the recitation of one instance after another, taken by Rev. Nipper from the scarlet book of everyday life. With all the power of delivery he could gather he recalled again and again for his 500 auditors the significance of the simple utterance—"Be not deceived. God is not mocked. Whatsoever ye sow that shall ye also reap."

Rev. Nipper's Sermon.

Rev. Nipper took for his text "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." He spoke in part as follows:

There are two words in this text that are worth the consideration of everyone and they are the words "whatsoever" and "that." When we look at this text from this viewpoint you will clearly see that it is impossible to sow one thing and reap another, or sow a little and not reap a great deal. A man goes out into the field with one bag of grain. He is able to carry it on his shoulder, but after it is planted and harvested it takes several wagons to haul it in. So it is with the things that we sow. There has been many a person who has sowed an unkind word, and they have had a terrible burden to carry the load of condemnation around till it was forgiven. The harvest is greater than the sowing. We can sow the seeds of flowers, and when they are in bloom we love to smell their fragrance, but if we sow thorns there is danger of being injured by them, or in other words, we are in danger of casting our pearls before swine. For instance, here is a mother who has given her consent to a parlor dance and then her daughter meets a young fellow who takes her out. She is asked to go to a roof garden. Soon the time comes when the door must be left unlocked till the late hour of night, and sooner or later her own daughter comes home ruined. I tell you it is the old story of another mother casting one of her pearls before the swine of this world and wakes up to the fact that whatever she sows she must reap. Some men in the world haven't any more sense than small boys. When we think of a boy we think of springtime of life; when we think of man we think of the falltime of life. The small boy who starts out making fun of the other boys for going to Sunday school and is not taken in hand by a mother or father usually winds up in his older years, or in the falltime of his life, still mocking the best things in the world.

Be No Deceived.

The text says, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; whatever a man soweth that shall he also reap." One day while laying in a sidetrack—while I was a railroad man—I got off my engine and walked around through the corn that almost hid me from view and as I looked at it the waving blades seemed to say to me, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." When I looked across into another field where the grain was waving to and fro, just waiting for the harvester, it seemed to say to me, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." When I arrived in Richmond and was on my way downtown I heard a little boy let out a stream of oaths just like a man and again something seemed to say to me, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

If we sow the seed of disobedience we will reap a harvest of the same thing. Adam and Eve sowed the seed of disobedience and they reaped a whirlwind harvest. I haven't any doubt that they had talked to their children and had warned them, but they had sowed some very bad seed, and in Cain we find a large harvest of disobedience. Therefore, we find a family in the old bible that can bear testimony that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Again, you sow the seed of deceit and you always reap a harvest of it. Look at Jacob deceiving his old father and stealing the blessing from Esau. He used the skins of animaals. Then when we look at another scene we find that after Jacob has become a father of twelve sons there springs up a feeling of jealousy between them on account of Joseph. He is sold to a band of Egyptians and then comes the harvest, Jacob's ow nchildren lying to him and deceiving him and making him believe something that is not true. So the same old story is true that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." David sowed the seed of lust and reaped a harvest of it; he sowed the seed of murder and reaped a harvest of it; he sowed the seed of rebellion and reaped a harvest of it.

Again, don't go too much on your own sincerity, because it is possible for you to be wrong. Here is a woman who has become ill and wants to take some medicine. She is sure that the kind she is taking will cure her, but it is poison and dies. She was sincere, but it meant and she dies. It may be you are taking just simply church membership for your salvation, which is not enough; it's right to belong to the church, but we should belong to God as well as the church, and they that belong to God are always the best in the church. So I am asking you to come and give yourself to him and begin to sow good seed from this night on.

No "New Models" in Mid-Season

THE Chandler Type 17 was a perfected car January 1st. It had back of it three years of refinement, three years of making good. There is no reason to change it or modify it or call it by some new name in mid-season.

Chandler Values are Permanent

The Chandler Type 17—thousands of them on the road today from coast to coast and giving the most satisfactory service—is distinctively the medium priced car of the year.

It's the car of a perfected motor, and the most beautiful body design. It is the car of greatest all around value and no marked up price. There is ample excuse for an advance in price, but it would not add to the value to increase the price.

We could not give more in this great car just by asking you to pay more.

UNABLE TO ENTRAP ORPET'S WITNESS

Waukegan, Ill., July 1.—Harry J. Carlin, who one week after the death of Marion Lambert found the bottle of molasses and water which Will H. Orpet said he threw away when he fled from Marion's body, took the stand today in the trial of Orpet charged with the murder of Miss Lambert. Attorney David Joslyn, of the prosecution, doubled and twisted, seeking to betray the witness into a damaging admission. Carlin usually replied with a grin.

"When you came upon the bottle did it look the same to you as when you first saw it," asked Joslyn.

"I never saw it before in my life."

The witness said he called other persons who were with him on the search and drew their attention to the bottle. Joslyn asked why.

"Because I knew the bottle would figure in the case and that they would be called as witnesses."

In response to another query as to the reason for his actions, Carlin replied: "I was working for the defense to clear this boy—to establish his innocence."

Dorothy Mason, sister-in-law of Celestia Youker, and a friend of Marion Lambert, was the most eagerly awaited witness when the trial was resumed today. She is expected to testify that she told Marion Lambert of Orpet's alleged engagement to Miss Youker. The defense maintains that it was this information which prompted Marion to plan suicide. It is expected that the most of the day will be taken up in the examination of witnesses who searched for the bottle of molasses and water which Orpet said he brought from Madison to give Marion to alleviate her supposed condition.

An adjournment of the case over the Fourth of July holiday will be taken this afternoon.

Since the spread of the disease patent medicine concerns have sent circulars broadcast, says a warning by the department of health. The department is taking steps to prevent any commercialization of the epidemic.

Revenue Collections in Fort Wayne for Fiscal Year Make Big Total.

For the fiscal year ending Friday E. B. Thumma, deputy revenue collector, has made a report showing a total of $428,558.72 collected by the department. The sum is the largest ever collected by the Fort Wayne office and Mr. Thumma has wired the amount of his collections to the department at Washington in order that his report could be a part of the general report of the country.

The collections by months were as follows: July, 1915, $39,225.47; August, $37,337.36; September, $42,480.42; October, $31,626.37; November, $33,094.62; December, $30,227.42; January, 1916, $31,705.34; February, $31,727.17; March, $34,508.99; April, $35,288.37; May, $45,484.16; June, $35,858.03.

Friday was the last day on which to pay the income tax and T. J. McLaughlin, deputy revenue collector, announced that all persons subject to tax in his territory had made payments, thus avoiding any penalty.

Sands, age 42, is dead of grief over an accident which occurred nine years ago, when he was a motorman of a car that ran over and killed Samue Hobson, a fellow employe. DANIELS APPROVES NEW NAVAL PROGRAM

Secretary Commends Plans for More Extensive Warship Building.

Washington, July 1.—Formal approval of the increased navy building program recommended by the senate naval committee in amending the annual appropriation bill passed by the house was given in a statement issued today by Secretary Daniels.

The committee, besides framing a program calling for four dreadnaughts and four battle cruisers, instead of five battle cruisers, only as provided by the house, wrote into the bill provision for completing within three years the general board's plan to add sixteen capital ships before 1922.

"It marks a radical new policy in the enlargement and increase in the navy," said Mr. Daniels' statement. "It is the first bill that has incorporated a continuing policy in the building of fighting ships. In his annual message to congress last December President Wilson placed emphasis upon the need of adopting a continuing policy."

MAY BE ON THE WAY BY MONDAY EVENING

That's the Impression at Camp Ralston Saturday Afternoon.

Indianapolis, July 1.—The impression prevails here this afternoon that the Indiana guard may be on its way to the Mexican border by Monday night. The artillery battalion is packing all necessary field equipment and disposing of that which will not be taken. The artillery battalion is now completely mustered and equipped.

Eight companies of the third regiment also are ready to move. The four companies of the Third were ineligible to federal support. Kendallville, South Bend, Portland and Monticello still are waiting for word from Washington announcing thier reinstatement.

These units were suspended from federal support months ago because of lack of interest and non-attendance at drill, but reinstatement has been recommended.

George E. Bill, a representative of the Studebaker corporation, was at the camp arranging for the pay of twenty-two men of the Third regiment who are employes of that company. Mr. Bill arranged with Col. Aubrey L. Kuhlman, commander of the camp, to receive the full pay of the men and give it to them as long as they remain in service.

AUTO STRIKES SAFETY ROPE AND HURTS MAN

Henry Meyer, architect, living at 615 West Jefferson street, who was standing against the rope stretched by the police to form a safety zone in front of the wrecked Carnahan building on West Jefferson street, was hurled fifteen feet and sustained a strained back when D. F. Moore, 1118 South Calhoun street ran his automobile against the rope shortly before noon Saturday.

Moore was driving east on Jefferson street. He was looking up at the building from which the front wall had fallen a few hours before. He did not see the rope stretched across the street. He thought the way was clear until a policeman shouted to him, he said. He stretched the big rope to its tightest tension before he succeeded in stopping his machine.

Meyer was standing just inside the rope inclosure. He was discussing the causes for the accident, and pointing up at the third story of the damaged structure when Moore's machine struck the rope. Meyer was hurled several feet and thrown to the pavement. His back was slightly strained by the sudden blow.

"NATURE CHILDREN" LIVE IN WOODS ALL SUMMER.

Atlanta, Ga., July 1.—"Nature children" are roaming the woods, swimming the streams, climbing the trees and mocking the birds over an old battlefield at Jester's Old Mill, 16 miles from Atlanta!

Clad in flowing Grecian robes, or in less, they gambol among the forest glades and run at random over the grassy slopes—carefree, worryless, attuned to perfect health!

Athenian culture, Spartan courage, Olympian grace are the ideals ever before these babes of the by-paths, whose parents have chosen this ancient method of giving their children an opportunity for right living and clear thinking.

Miss Robert Jester, a girl of 8, and George Alfred Jester, going on 3, were the pioneers of this child colony; now there are many more. Their parents go out from the city for the summer, and around the historic ante-bellum mill are now grouped a score of camp shacks, a dancing pavilion, swimming pool, bath houses, and roadhouse for auto parties.

The "nature children" romp over old trenches, now mossy and flower-strewn, that were dug by the confederates at the battle of Jonesboro. They explore the un-used mill-race, invade the homes of the bullfrog and the thrush, and win at first hand a love of nature, that, their parents believe, will make them better citizens in days to come.

And no child at Jester's Old Mill has ever been sick since the camp was opened!

Funston Withholds His Comment on Mex. Charges

San Antonio, July 1.—General Funston reserved comment upon the charges of bad faith made against him by Carranza's minister of foreign affairs and then concentrated his attention on the silent marshaling of his growing army along the border line.

Reports from General Pershing in Mexico and from headquarters commanders along the border reflected the preparations being made by the Mexican war department for a clash with the American army.

Troops trains are nearing the border from north, east and west, but increased efforts were made to keep from the public the actual schedules of the trains and the time of their arrival at destinations.

With the exception of the vanguard of the Illinois guardsmen that reached here last night no fresh troops have reached San Antonio, and will not before late today or tonight. One of the trains bearing guardsmen was slipping eastward along the border towards Brownsville, with a precision that was gratifying to army staff officers. Railway officials were moving throughout the United States scores of troop laden trains that will reach the border at hours known only to them and officers detailed for work in connection with the mobilization. On all lines where army officers and railway officials believed attempts might be made to interfere with the movement, small details of soldiers have been sent and bridges were under guard.

SAVE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

New Policy Returns $636,000 to Federal Treasury for Year.

Washington, July 1.—There was turned back into the treasury today $636,971 saved during the past fiscal year in the purchase of sites and on construction of public buildings through the policy of limiting expenses to the requirement of a community rather than using all of any sum appropriated by congress. Just 103 new buildings were completed during the year.

HONORS FOR LOUISE METZGER.

Bleeke—Schmidt.

A beautiful home wedding took place Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock when Miss Hulda Schmidt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Schmidt, became the bride of Mr. Herbert Bleeke, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed C. Bleeke, of Decatur. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. Philip Wambsganss. The bride made a fine appearance in a gown of white taffeta and lace with pearl trimming and she carried a shower bouquet of brides roses tied with swansonia. The veil was fashioned in cap effect with a wreath of swansonia. Miss Ella Bleeke, a sister to the groom, was bridesmaid and looked exceedingly well in a gown of pink satin with a bouquet of pink Killarney roses. The maid of honor, Miss Leba Schmidt, a sister of the bride, was dressed in a pretty embroidered organdie hung over silk and her flowers were sunburst roses. A brother of the bride, Mr. Oscar Schmidt, was best man. The music for the wedding was that from "Lohengrin" and the bride entered with her father, who gave her away. A banking of palms and ferns and a white kneeling bench were the appropriate surrounding for the bridal party during the marriage service. Mrs. A. J. Bleeke sang "O Promise Me" and during the ceremony "I Love You Truly." Prof German presided at the piano. The house was tastefully decorated with smilax, roses and garden flowers and a handsome wedding cake formed the decoration of the bride's table. About fifty guests were present. SHOP AND RAILROAD NEWS

LITTLEJOHN HAS QUIT THE FORGE

Man Who Spent a Half-Century in Fort Wayne Shops Has Retired.

William Littlejohn has retired from the forge, after working at the blacksmith's trade over a half-century. Since the early part of 1905 Mr. Littlejohn was employed in the blacksmith shop of the General Electric works until last evening, when he served notice on Foreman Henry C. Lepper that he would retire from the service and spend the balance of his life in ease, being about seventy-five years old. No man ever was more popular with his shop associates than is Mr. Littlejohn and this sentiment was expressed in the actions and words of the employes at the blacksmith shop when they learned that the aged blacksmith was resigning. Before going to the Electric works Mr. Littlejohn worked at the Wabash a third of a century, resigning to go to Jackson, Mich., where he remained only a few months.

A. L. Hadley, L. D. Nordstrum and W. W. Griffiths, of the engineering department of the General Electric works, are en route to Lake James this afternoon. Mr. Griffiths will remain there two weeks, but Mr. Hadley and Mr. Nordstrum will return to resume their duties in the works Wednesday morning.

SHORT ON COACHES

Nickel Plate Gives Notice It Can't Furnish Extras.

Because of the heavy movement of National Guards over the line, the Nickel Plate announces that it is short on coaches and can furnish none but those in the regular trains for Sunday or other excursion business. Up to date the company has handled twelve train loads of soldiers, each train requiring from six to twelve coaches, and the movement is not yet over. One of the officials said this morning that there would be five or six more soldier trains over the line today or tonight and more were in sight for early next week. The Nickel Plate's position on the passenger equipment question, the following bulletin issued by John Y. Callahan, general passenger agent, explains the situation:

"Due to movement of United States troops to the Mexican border, all available coaches owned by the Nickel Plate road (excepting those necessary for service in regular trains), have been placed at the disposal of a properly designated United States government official.

"Therefore, when purchasing Sunday excursion tickets, please consider your personal comfort in space available in the coaches, as no extra coaches will be added to any of our trains.

"Those purchasers of tickets decide not to go the same, and will return them to selling agent on date of purchase, their money will be refunded."

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

Is the Box Company's Detroit Excursion July 22.

A great many people are of the opinion that the Fort Wayne Box company's excursion to Detroit Saturday, July 22, is for its employes only, and that the trip will be made via Toledo, thence by boat. Tickets are not on sale at the Wabash depot, but can be secured at the following places: Alter's cigar store, Reigel's cigar store, D. & N. pharmacy, Long's Novelty House, Hoham's pharmacy, Meinzen's drug store, on Maumee road and Walton avenue; Koehlinger's drug store, on East Washington street; Meyer Brothers, at Broadway and Taylor street; Jacob Bill drug store, East Creighton avenue; Lakeside Pharmacy, Hutzell drug store, West Main street; Gocke drug store, Broadway; Miller's pharmacy, Fairfield avenue; Koehn's drug store, East Lewis; Albersmeyer drug store, Wells street; Northside pharmacy, Wells street, and by all employes of the Fort Wayne Box company. The trip will be made by all rail, the train leaving Fort Wayne at 5 a. m., and arriving at Detroit at 9 a. m. A free trip through the great Fort plant will be one of the entertainment features of the trip. A second train may be sent out, if it is found necessary. Safety and comfort is the slogan of the committee in charge.

TASK OF COMMISSION TO UNSCRAMBLE EGGS

Early Interurban History Revealed in Audit of Ft. Wayne System.

Indianapolis, July 1.—Auditors of the public service commission who have just completed an examination of the books of the Fort Wayne & Northern Indiana Traction company, have revealed some interesting chapters in early interurban railway finance in Indiana. The audit was made in the case in which the city of Fort Wayne is asking for an adjustment of electric rates.

One of the problems of the commission, that may be solved at the time the evidence in the case is taken, is "unscrambling the eggs." Hidden away in a mass of figures in the audit is the simple statement, "addition stock account $2,910,283.90 and additional bonds, $1,567,000." There is no explanation of these items.

The "additional stock and bond accounts appears in the audit at the time the Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction company was reorganized or at the time this company swallowed smaller ones, and the Fort Wayne & Northern Indiana Traction company was formed.

Whether the patrons are expected to pay rates based on $4,447,283.90 of water; the total of the stock and bond accounts unexplained, or whether it is a legitimate account will be one of the eggs to be unscrambled.

Big Company Took Over Little Ones.

The Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley company, at the time of the merger, was the leading company into which a dozen or so companies had just been merged. That total of $4,477,283.90 would have to be shown on the balance sheet of the company as a liability which the company owed to the persons who got this "additional stock and additional bonds." And if this was to be shown as a liability, a corresponding asset must be shown to balance the books and some assertions have been made that attorneys for the city of Fort Wayne will show the total property accounts of all the subsidiary organizations amounted to $4,477,283.90 less than the total of the property account shown as an asset on the balance sheet of the organized company.

The Fort Wayne company now shows on its books total assets of $20,455,745.71 and a total property account of $17,958,814.48. In 1911 the company showed a property account of $16,864,090.94 and total assets of $17,376,497.27. That was the development of five years.

It is shown in the audit of the company that it paid for the construction and equipment of a line from Fort Wayne to Bluffton, $1,063,181.03, and for the construction and equipment of a line from Lafayette to Logansport, $1,662,113.77.

The audit shows company officials are relating facts when they tell of the decrease in revenues in the last few years. The audit also shows small dividends have been paid and that interest has been paid on a big bonded indebtedness.

The manner in which the many smaller companies were merged also is shown by the audit.

The Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction company, which eventually became the Fort Wayne & Northern Indiana Traction company, was organized Feb. 25, 1904, with a capital stock of $7,500,000. J. Levering Jones, Charles Murdock, Hugh J. McGowan, Randall Morgan, George McCullough and Bayard ually absorbed smaller companies.

The audit shows June 26, 1913, the company bought the property of the Lafayette Street Railway company, giving $375,000 in bonds of the Wabash Valley Traction company, assuming liabilities of $16,750 and a mortgage indebtedness of $225,000.

Smaller Lines Were Absorbed.

Under date of Feb. 25, 1904, the company bought the properties of the Fort Wayne Traction company, the Wabash River Traction company, the Wabash-Logansport Traction company, the Logansport Railway company, the Logansport, Rochester and Northern Traction company for $900,000 in preferred stock, $6,000,000 in common stock and $1,500,000 in bonds of the Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley Traction company. The company assumed considerable bonded indebtedness, and immediately issued $7,500,000 in bonds.

The Fort Wayne and Southwestern Traction company and the Fort Wayne Electric Light and Power company was purchased May 20, 1904, for $25,000 in cash, $100,000 in preferred stock and $1,635,000 in bonds of the Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley company.

The Fort Wayne, Bluffton and Marion Traction company was purchased in 1906 for the assumption of its bonded indebtedness of $400,000. The Fort Wayne Power company was purchased in 1908 for $1,800 cash and bonds of $100,000 assumed.

The entire lot, bag and baggage, was sold to the Fort Wayne and Northern Indiana Traction company under date of Feb. 16, 1911, for $4,000,000 in common stock of the new company and $2,500,000 in preferred stock.

Light Company Already Purchased.

The Lafayette and Logansport Traction company had purchased the Carroll Electric Light company, of Delphi, and both became a part of the Wabash Valley Traction company. Another road was added to the system when the Fort Wayne and Northern Indiana built the Fort Wayne, Bluffton and Marion Traction company.

The Fort Wayne and Northern Indiana Traction company now has underlying bonds as follows: Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley, $6,966,000; Fort Wayne, Bluffton and Marion, $100,000; Lafayette and Logansport, $849,000; Fort Wayne Power company, $57,000; Fort Wayne Traction company, $29,000; Wabash River company, $275,000; Lafayette Street Railway, $225,000; Logansport Railroad company, $5,000, and second mortgage bonds on the Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley company of $92,000.

As showing the decrease of earnings the comparative balance sheet shows from 1904 to 1911 the total earnings were $8,563,519.22, and from 1911 to 1915, $8,337,609.89. The net income for the first period was $588,661 and for the second period, $544,494.

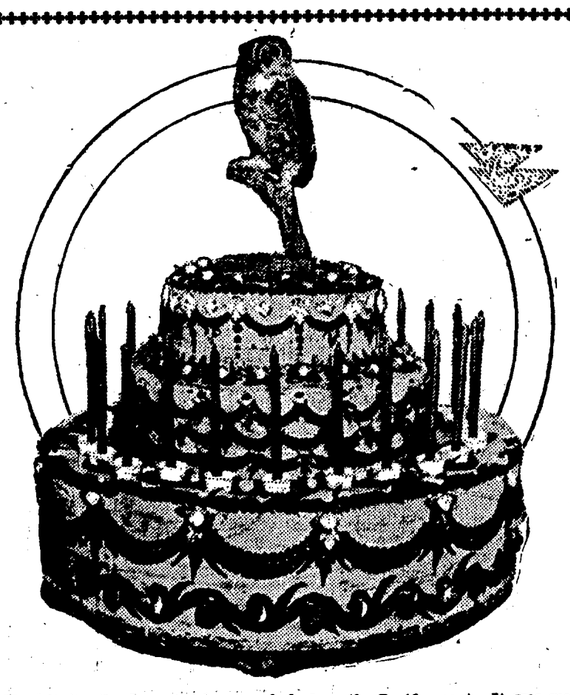
GIANT CAKE CUT TO FEED HUNGRY.



Here it is—the largest cake ever baked on the Pacific coast. It was made for the Owl Drug company, of San Francisco, in honor of the twenty-fourth birthday of the firm, which maintains a string of twenty-two stores on the west coast.

The giant confesction was cut into 5,000 slices and distributed among a multitude of citizens. A corps of pastry experts worked two weeks to make it. It weighed 600 pounds, was five fee t high, four feet in diameter and contained eighteen cubic feet of sweetness.

Fifty pounds of butter, 3,100 eggs, 100 pounds of sugar, 100 pounds of jelly filling and 750 pounds of frosting were required in its construction. On the top was a pretty representation of an owl.

HARRISON HILL PLAT SHOWS MODERN IDEAS

Many people interested in the latest developments of city planning are surprised to find that one of the newest features advocated in the books of Charles Mulford Robinson, the famous city planning expert, have already been incorporated in the plat of Harrison Hill, the coming addition located in the angle formed by Calhoun street and Rudisill boulevard. This feature is the arrangement of playgrounds for the children in a strip separating the rear ends of lots facing in opposite directions, occupying the space that would be taken up by alleys in an addition layed out upon the old style idea. This playground is forty-eight feet wide, and because of its location between the rear ends of the lots prevents the children from getting out in the street during their romps. Many other modern features have been included in Harrison Hill. Details regarding these may be secured from Hilgeman and Schaaf, North American building.

WINONA SEES A NEW AUDITORIUM COMING

Project for Splendid Big Building Has Hopeful Aspect.

Winona Lake, Ind., July 1.—It begins to look very much as though the Winona assembly would have a new auditorium in the near future. At a meeting of the committee on arrangements of the Church of the Brethren at their recent conference held at this place, a resolution was unanimously adopted favoring a general appeal throughout all the districts of this denomination asking for subscriptions to apply toward the expense of the proposed auditorium. Since the Church of the Brethren has decided to hold its general conference at Winona Lake every three years the need of a more commodious assembly room is strongly felt.

The proposed site for the new edifice is directly in front of the administration building in the large enclosure which is surrounded on all sides by a grape arbor. The cost of the structure has not been definitely fixed but it will be modern in every way, and fully equipped to accommodate the largest crowds that assemble at this popular resort. The present auditorium is altogether inadequate for many of the large chautauqua attractions as well as for the Bible conference.

It is known to a few of the Winona officials that Mr. E. O. Excell, chairman of the board of directors, sent a letter to the committee of arrangements of the Church of the Brethren while they were in session here offering to pay $1,000 toward the new auditorium if it is decided to build it. He furthermore stated that he would make his subscription equal to one-tenth of any sum they might raise among their members. Mr. Excell has been one of the heaviest financial supporters of Winona in recent years, having personally contributed more than any other individual.

Hon. William Jennings Bryan, who is now the president of the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference, also sent a letter to the officials of the Church of the Brethren, approving their plans regarding the erection of a mammoth auditorium on the grounds. He also expressed the wish that they might be successful in the undertaking. Dr. Sol C. Dickey, general secretary of Winona, has for several years looked forward to the time when a new auditorium would be provided and has announced that with the promised co-operation of the great Dunkard church, the building can easily be ready within the next two years.

Friends of Winona are enthusiastic over the outlook for the future. The cottages are well filled and an air of confidence generally prevails. The program, which is to open on Sunday, July 2nd, includes some of the most notable attractions of this country and will be a higher average than any ever presented here.

The chief feature of Patriotic day, which is to be observed on Tuesday, July 4th, will be an address by Charles W. Fairbanks. He will speak at 2:30 on the subject, "A World Tour."

DIVINING ROD IS A BIG AID TO GERMANS

Scorned and Flouted Idea is Proven to Be of Valuable Service.

Berlin, June 15.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Scientific experiments with the divining rod conducted by Germans over a period of months in the desert wastes of Syria and Eastern Egypt—approximately in the district of the new railway line being built toward the Suez Canal—not only have resulted in the discovery of water, but have proved that the scorned and flouted rod is about 70 per cent infallible, according to Dr. Th. Preyer, formerly in the German consular service, who is a practical scientist himself. He admits that he should belong to that majority of intelligent persons who deride the divining rod as a swindle if he had not been able to see it work for four months.

Dr. Preyer admits that he does not know the secret of the divining rod, and that seemingly a peculiarly "gifted" man must use the instrument to have success. He believes that science will discover that subterranean streams flowing under pressure, emit rays like the radio-active rays of some springs which force their way through the earth and affect certain peculiarly constituted persons.

He describes Major von G——, who used the rod in Egypt, as a remarkably nervous man who becomes "tuned up" to an unusual tension when he takes the rod into his hands and begins to walk across the desert.

The major generally uses an iron rod, for, though it is less sensible to the mysterious forces which make it tremble, it works satisfactorily because of his highly developed "gifts." He has, however, and occasionally uses, rods of wood, aluminum and silver, which are increasingly sensitive in the order named.

The iron rod never gives a hint about the character of the water which it reveals, and the major for a time discovered continually that the streams so painstakingly dug out were brackish and salt, filled with water impossible for human consumption. Finally, however, he found that a rod of aluminum and bronze, held over a spot at which the iron rod had signalled water, would fly upwards if the water was fresh and drinkable, but remain unresponsive or drop downward if the water was salt. This instrument, however, cannot always be trusted, for there are cases on record in which it signalled salt water, and was unaffected by the clear, good water that was found under a stratum of salt.

The major's later experiments have been made in a section of country where water has never been known. The district is four by twenty kilometers in extent, and yet water is said to have been found now at depths of fifty and fifty-five meters in a number of places.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE

SEVENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

Lieut. Jarvis Hope is detailed by the United States naval board to investigate and report his findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke, which serves to bring the submarine to a state of perfection. The lieutenant arrives in Valdavia and is welcomed by the inventor and his daughter, Cleo. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat, a Japanese helper is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism of the ventilating device. Hope reports favorably on the new device but there are others interested in it. An attempt to burglarize Doctor Burke's laboratory fails, but later Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom. Cleo sells her father's library to get money; later she finds a note from which she learns that they contain the secret formula. With Hope she races to the auctioneer's store only to find it in flames. Olga Ivanoff and Gerald Morton, two spies in search of the formula, attempt to capture Cleo when she calls at the house of Stephanski, the anarchist. Hope rushes to her aid; Morton shoots at him but the bullet hits a bomb, in the cellar, which explodes. Stephanski dies in the wreck of his house; the others escape. Hope and Cleo attend a ball at Mrs. Delmar's, whose nephew has two of the missing books. Mahlin, a spy, attempts to steal the books, but is discovered by Hope; in the excitement that follows the books disappear. Mahlin escapes. Hope and Cleo take a boat for an island out in the bay. The conspirators follow in other boats. Mahlin and the Jap turn out the island light. Morton's boat with the countess strikes a stray mine in the bay.

For the three in the little launch it was a night of unforgettable terror. The elements seemed united to destroy them. The wind howled and the sea roared like monsters ravening their prey. But at last a pale, faint light began to overspread the eastern sky. It was a cold, gray dawn, but to those in the launch it was the most beautiful that they had ever seen, for it showed them the misty outline of an island rising, not half a mile away, above the storm-lashed sea.

"Thank God!" said Hope devoutly. "The lord be praised!" echoed Morissey, and they both glanced instinctively at Cleo, who, wrapped in Hope's overcoat, half lay, half sat, in the water which was swashing about the cockpit, almost unconscious from exposure and exhaustion.

"That's not Middle island," said Morissey, staring intently. "If it was we could see the radio station. It must be one of the North Farallons. It looks like an ugly shore to land on, with a wind like this blowing."

But, as they forged slowly nearer, they saw with relief that what appeared from a distance to be a solid rampart of rock was broken here and there by fissures which widened into coves and inlets, and that these coves and inlets had, for the most part, sandy shores on which a small boat, such as theirs could be beached without serious danger of being wrecked. Just as the first rays of the rising sun gilded the tops of the cliffs the launch glided between the barrier reefs into the smooth waters of one of these coves and Hope staggered ashore with Cleo in his arms.

Laying her gently on the shingle, he stripped off her water-soaked shoes, while Morissey hastily collected a pile of driftwood and saturated it with gasoline. Soon they were warming their chilled bodies and benumbed limbs before a blazing fire. In the base of the cliff behind them centuries of erosion had produced a cave as large as a good-sized room, and into this cave Hope and Morissey carried the cushions from the launch and some tarpaulins, which they found in one of the lockers.

"Now, Cleo," said Hope, "you had better go in and undress and dry your clothes in front of the fire. If you don't, we will have a girl with pneumonia on our hands. While you are getting dry, Morissey and I will try to climb to the top of the cliffs and see if there is any food or shelter on the island."

The ascent of the cliffs proved even more difficult than Hope had anticipated, for, though he and Morissey penetrated several of the fissures in the expectation of finding a path to the top, they came each time to narrow crevices or unscalable walls of rock. Their patience was eventually rewarded, however, by discovering a narrow and precipitous trail which led them, after half an hour's hard climbing, to the tableland which formed the roof, as it were, of the island.

"The best thing for us to do, Morissey," said Hope, "is to separate. You follow the line of the cliffs in one direction and I'll go in the other. We'll work right around until we meet each other again."

"Aye, aye, sir," said Morissey obediently, and off he started.

For nearly an hour Hope walked steadily, clambering over rocks and bowlders, pushing his way through dense underbrush, scrambling across ravines. The storm had disappeared, and the Pacific, as though exhausted by its passions of the night, basked languorously beneath the sun. So wild, so deserted, was the appearance of the island, that the young officer had almost abandoned hope of its having any inhabitants, when, rounding a shoulder of rock, he saw against the skyline the figure of a man. In response to Hope's shout, the stranger, a tall, sun-bronzed man of middle age, came scrambling down the rocky hillside.

"I had no idea that there was anyone else on the island," he said, in a pleasant, well-modulated voice.

"And I had begun to think that I was a Robinson Crusoe," said Hope, laughing.

"What are you doing over here?" asked the other curiously. "Fishing?"

"No," said Hope; "I'm a shipwrecked sailor, and though I'm not exactly starving, I will be if I have to go without food much longer," and he related briefly their experiences in the storm and how they had found refuge on the island.

"By the way," he added, "do you happen to have any gasoline? We can't get away from here until we get some."

"I can give you and your friends something to eat," was the answer, "but I haven't any gasoline. I'm only here myself because of the storm. You see," he explained, "I'm in the coast survey."

"By Jove!" exclaimed Hope, stopping dead, "then you must know the man we're looking for. He's in the coast survey, too. His name is Fitzmaurice—Arthur Fitzmaurice."

"You're talking to him," was the answer.

"Well, I'll be hanged!" Hope ejaculated. "Talk about having luck!"

"What did you want to see me about?" inquired Fitzmaurice.

"I was told by an auctioneer named Dawson, in San Francisco, that last week you bought three books of him at auction. They were scientific works—on hydrography, if I remember rightly."

"Right you are," said the other. "Hydrography is in my line, you know, so when I saw those books on the auction list that Dawson sent me, I went over to his place and bid them in. They came from the library of a Doctor Burke, didn't they?"

"Yes," said Hope, "and it's Doctor Burke's daughter who is waiting down at the cove. It was not until after the disposal of the library that she learned that her father had left a legacy for her in one of the books. So, when she heard that three of the books were in your possession, she insisted on coming with me in order to examine them for herself. That explains how I happen to be on this island in company with an extremely attractive young woman. I suppose you left the books over on Middle island."

"No," said Fitzmaurice, "it happens that two of the books are here in my shack. I brought them over yesterday, intending to look them over, but I was so dead tired last night that I didn't even open them. The third book isn't here, I'm sorry to say, but you can get it without much trouble. I loaned it to a friend, Dr. Emerson Owen, who lives at a little placed called Sandsboro, on the mainland. Miss Burke is very welcome indeed to see the two books that I have with me, however."

* * * * * * *

When Mahlin and Satsuma had extinguished the light on Southeast island, after sandbagging the lighthouse keeper, they were as certain that they had permanently ridded themselves of Hope and Cleo as though they had seen their lifeless bodies washed upon the shore. It never entered their heads that the little launch, with no friendly light to guide it past the rocks, could live through such a storm. Callously disregarding the groans of the injured keeper, they made themselves comfortable in his quarters and the next morning, the storm having abated, they set out for Middle island in search of Fitzmaurice, only to learn from the officer in charge of the radio station that the man for whom they were looking had left the day before for one of the North Farallons and that he had not yet returned.

About the same time, therefore, that Hope, Cleo, and Morissey were drying themselves before their fire at one end of the island, Mahlin and Satsuma were landing from their launch at the other end.

2—"What on Earth Are You Doing Here, Hook?"
3—Down, Down, He Went, Straight as an Arrow.

Though there was no one in sight when the two conspirators landed, they noted signs of recent blasting operations, presumably for the purpose of improving the little harbor, while on the shore had been erected a rude hut for the storage of the workmen's tools. So little was there to fear from marauders in this remote spot that there was not even a lock on the door of the toolhouse, whose only contents, as Mahlin found upon investigation, were some picks, shovels, and crowbars, a keg of nails, a few coils of wire, and a box marked "Dynamite."

Following the directions given them by the officer at the radio station, they followed the precipitous footpath which led from the landing up the rocky slope to the plateau. Twenty minutes of stiff climbing brought them to the shack where, so they had been told, they would probably find Fitzmaurice staying. The shack, a flimsy affair of rough lumber, hung literally between sea and sky, for half of it rested on the rock, while the other half, which was supported by a framework of light timbers, overhung the ocean.

There being no response to his knock, Mahlin, finding the door unlocked, entered the cabin. Though the single room which it contained was vacant, the remains of a meal on the table and the rumpled blankets on the bunk, which was built against the wall, together with the odor of tobacco smoke, showed that it had been very recently occupied. Suddenly Satsuma, who had been prowling about the room, gave an exclamation.

Mahlin unceremoniously snatched them from him.

"You're right," he said. "They're the very books we're after. Here's Burke's name written in them. We'd better take them and go while the going's good. It might be unhealthy for us if this fellow Fitzmaurice should—"

He broke off abruptly and stood listening.

"I thought I heard voices," he whispered, laying the books on the table.

Stepping to the door, he caught sight of Hope and Fitzmaurice approaching the cabin.

"Hell's bell!" snarled Mahlin. "We didn't drown that fool nacal officer after all. Here he comes and he's got a man with him. Bring those books along, Satsuma; we'll have to make a break for it," and he darted out of the cabin.

The Japanese, pausing only long enough to snatch up the books, followed. As he appeared in the doorway of the shack Hope recognized him.

"By heaven!" he cried, "it's Satsuma!" and he dashed forward with Fitzmaurice at his heels. But Mahlin and Satsuma did not await them. The former fled down the path leading to the harbor where they had left their launch, while the Japanese, momentarily confused by Hope's unexpected appearance, turned and ran blindly in the opposite direction.

"I'll take the Jap!" Hope shouted to Fitzmaurice. "He's got the books I'm after. You attend to the other fellow."

The chase which followed led across a country broken by unexpected outcroppings of rocks, by stretches of loose stones, by enormous crags and bowlders; it led across furze-covered hillsides and other hillsides carpeted with wild wiregrass. Suddenly, when his pursuer was only a few paces behind him, Satsuma swerved and dashed down a narrow path which apparently promised a means of escape. But instead of leading down the cliff, as he had supposed, it ended abruptly on a precipice-bordered headland. The Japanese could go no farther! Behind him was a pursuer whom he knew to be relentless; before him a dizzy precipice, and at the foot of it, two hundred feet below, the sea. Hope, confident that Satsuma could not now escape, was advancing on him determinedly when all at once the Oriental whipped out a pistol, there was a flash and bang, and a bullet sang past Hope's head. He threw himself against a rock, and as he did so a second bullet spattered itself against it. Whenever he showed himself Satsuma's pistol spat angrily. Hope kept count of the shots and at the sixth he sprang forward recklessly. But the Japanese had still another catridge in his pistol and he was determined that that cartridge should do its work. Resting the barrel of his weapon against a bowlder, he waited until his pursuer was almost upon him before firing. But, at the very instant that Satsuma's finger tightened on the trigger, Hope's foot caught in a root and he fell headlong, while the bullet, which was meant for his heart, whistled harmlessly over his shoulder. As Hope bounded to his feet, the Japanese, tossing away the empty pistol, ran to the very edge of the cliff. He still held the precious books in his hand. Hope divined his intention.

"You might as well give up, Satsuma," he called. "And if you destroy those books it will go all the harder for you. Come, now, hand them over."

"You'll never get the books," snarled the Japanese, and with the words he flung them into the abyss.

"But I'll get you!" shouted Hope, beside himself with anger, and he leaped at Satsuma, who stood poised on the precipice's very brink.

"You'll not get me, either," replied the Oriental with an oath, and, just as Hope was about to clutch him, he turned and leaped. Down, down, down he went, straight as an arrow and as gracefully, and as cleanly as an arrow he disappeared into the sea. A long moment elapsed before Hope, standing on the cliff above, saw a sleek black head bob above the water and Satsuma, apparently none the worse for his perilous dive, struck out lustily for the shore. He had not gone far, however, before a launch shot around the headland and a man whom Hope recognized, even at that distance, as Satsuma's companion, pulled the Japanese aboard.

As Hope was slowly making his way back to the shack he met Fitzmaurice.

"The fellow I was chasing got away from me," said the latter. "He had a launch waiting for him in the cove. What happened to the Japanese that you were after? I thought I heard some shots."

"He got away, too," said Hope. "He tried to get me with an automatic, but he wasn't a good shot. When he saw that I had him cornered he threw the books over the cliff and then jumped after them."

"Well, there's no use in crying over spilled milk," Fitzmaurice remarked consolingly. "That was a mighty tough pair of citizens and I'm glad that they've departed. I never dreamed, when I came over here yesterday, that I was going to step right into the middle of a real blood-and-thunder drama like this. Why, it beats the Old Cap Collier stories that I used to read when I was a youngster. The thing for us to do now," he added, "is to go up to the shack and get some food and take it down to Miss Burke. The poor girl must be almost dead from hunger."

Having filled their pockets with the small store of food which Fitzmaurice had remaining, they were leaving the shack when Morissey hailed them. He explained that he had followed the line of the cliffs without seeing anyone.

It was drawing on toward noon when they reached the cave where they had left Cleo. From within it came the sound of voices in animated conversation.

"That's Cleo's voice," said Hope in surprise, "but who on earth can she be talking to?"

"Well, I'll be hanged!" said Hope, stopping dead with astonishment at the sight of the one-armed sailor. "What on earth are you doing here, Hook? I thought we had left you in a saloon in San Francisco. How did you get here?"

"I don't know 'zactly myself, lootenant," said Hook, a trifle sheepishly. "Morissey here wuz a tinkerin' with his ingine and, sez I to myself, 'it'll be half an hour before they're ready to start, so I'll just step acrost the street and get a drink,' but when I got back, lootenant, you wuz gone. Waal, I wuz a-standin' there, wonderin' what I'd better do, when up comes a taxi and who should get out of it but thet feller Morton. He had a girl with him—a stunner she wuz, too—and a little, dark feller who looked's though he might be a furriner. 'I wonder what they're doin' round here?' sez I to myself, and, thinkin' that I'd overhear their conversation, I steps behind a lumber pile and I hears 'em ask the watchman ef he knowed where they could hire a launch to go to the Farallons. He told 'em there warn't no launch, but he guessed thet they could hire the Sea Hawk. You 'member her, lootenant, the big sixty-footer thet was tied up alongside Morissey's launch?"

"Yes," said Hope, "I remember her. Go on with your story."

"Ez soon's I heered thet they wuz a goin' to the Farallons, I made up my mind thet I'd go along, too, so's to keep an eye on 'em, for I hadn't never hed much use fer thet feller Morton. So, when no one wuz a lookin', I jest slipped aboard and hid myself in a sort o' locker forrard o' the cabin. I found some cushions and a piece o' tarpaulin there and made myself as snug and shipshape ez could be. Waal, I reckon I musta fell asleep after the boat started, fer the next thing I knowed there wuz a noise like a million thunderclaps put together—it 'minded me o' thet time the magazine blew up on the old Mohican off Coronel—and the Sea Hawk seemed to sorta fall apart around me and I wuz shot about a million feet up in the air. I guess I must lost track o' things for a while, for the next thing I knowed I wuz in the water, hangin' onto a plank for dear life and hollerin' for someone to pick me up. It was as dark as the inside uv a pocket and there wuz a big sea runnin'. I kept on a hollerin' for a while, but no one answered, so I made up my mind thet all the others musta bin lost. 'I reckon you're headed straight for Davy Jones' locker this time, Hook Barnacle,' sez I to myself, but I hung onto my plank like grim death, expectin' every minit to be washed off, and after a while it began to get light and I seed thet I wuz headin' straight fer this here island. What with hangin' onto the plank and floating' about in the water all night and not havin' nothing to eat, I wuz so doggone weak when I reached the shore thet I jest fell down on the sand and went sound asleep. I musta slept quite some time, fer the sun was pretty high when I woke up; so, thinkin' I'd see ef I could find something to eat, I started to walk up the shore. I hadn't gone more'n a mile or so when I seed the smoke uv a fire, and who should I see a settin' in front o' it but Miss Cleo here! That's all there is to my yarn, lootenant, 'cept thet I'm so blamed hungry thet I could eat a house."

"Not a thing, lootenant," asserted Hook. "There ain't no manner o' doubt but thet the old Sea Hawk went down with everyone on board 'cept me."

"We heard an explosion, you remember, sir," said Morissey, "just about the time the Southeast island light went out. It seemed somewhere to windward of us."

"Yes," said Hope, "I remember it now. It must have been the explosion on the Sea Hawk that we heard. I can't imagine what could have caused it, though. It's another unsolved mystery of the sea."

"Well, here's another mystery of the sea for you to solve, Jarvis," said Cleo, who, during Hook's recital, had been standing with her hands behind her, and she suddenly flashed before the unbelieving eyes of Hope and Fitzmaurice the very books which Satsuma had thrown over the cliff!

Hope emitted a long whistle of astonishment.

"Where on earth did you get them, Cleo?" he asked, staring at the water-soaked volumes as though his eyes were deceiving him.

"They came in the same way that Hook did," she answered. "They were washed up by the sea."

"Did you find anything in them, Miss Burke?" inquired Fitzmaurice, who had been listening with absorbed interest to the conversation.

"I haven't examined them yet," she replied. "They are so wet, you see, that the leaves are all stuck together. I'm going to put them in the sun and let them dry."

"I've a better plan than that," said Fitzmaurice. "Why don't you bring them up to my shack? We'll start a fire and while the books are drying you can lie down on my bunk and get some sleep. You must be nearly dead after last night's experience."

"That's a good idea," agreed Hope. "Miss Burke is very much in need of rest, though she won't admit it. But we must make some arrangements to get back to the city. I'm afraid we'll have to trouble you, Fitzmaurice, to take us over in your sailboat to Middle island. From there I can send a radio message to San Francisco for a boat to come out and get us."

"Excuse my making the suggestion, sir," said Morissey, "but why don't you let Hook and me go across to Middle island with Mr. Fitzmaurice and get some gasoline—they'll surely have some at the radio station—and bring it back in the sailboat."

We will now, in the parlance of the motion-picture people, "cut back" to Mahlin and Satsuma. After the Japanese had been rescued from the water by his co-conspirator, instead of heading for the mainland, they landed unobserved on the island and, taking every precaution not to be seen, they made their way to the summit of a brush-covered knoll which overlooked the shack. From here they saw the return of the party; they saw Hook, Morissey and Fitzmaurice descend the path leading to the cove where the latter's skiff was anchored, and they saw Cleo and Hope enter the shack. They saw, moreover, to their intense astonishment, that Hope was carrying the books which Satsuma had thrown into the sea.

"By making a big detour," said Mahlin, "we can creep along the edge of the cliff and get up to the shack without being seen, because it has no windows except at the front and back. Then, by crawling underneath, we can hear everything that goes on inside. They're evidently going to examine those books—heaven only knows where they got them! If they find the formula we'll hear them say so, in which case—" He concluded the sentence by significantly drawing his forefinger across his throat.

Owing to the necessity of avoiding observation, their progress was slow, and it was an hour later before they crawled between the timbers which supported the seaward side of the shack. Only the roughly laid board floor separated the two crouching beneath the shack from the unsuspecting pair within it. So near were they, indeed, to Hope and Cleo that, as Mahlin whispered to Satsuma, "We can hear 'em change their minds," they heard Cleo's yawns as she awakened from her nap and said "Aren't those books dry enough so that we can look at them now, Jarvis?"

A few minutes later came an ejaculation of impatience from Hope and the thud of a book tossed upon the floor. "There's nothing in that book—that's certain," he said, disgustedly, and, a little later, "Nor in this one."

Mahlin and Satsuma glanced at each other significantly. There was no need for them to trouble further about those two books.

"What shall we do now, Jarvis?" they heard Cleo ask.

"As soon as Hook and Morissey return with the gasoline we will start back," he answered. "But, instead of returning to San Francisco, what would you think of our making straight for Sandsboro? It's the little coast town where Doctor Owen lives—the man, you know, to whom Fitzmaurice loaned the other book."

Mahlin did not wait to hear anything more. Beckoning to Satsuma to follow, he crawled silently away. When they were out of earshot of the shack he turned to his companion.

"You heard what they said, Satsuma? There's another of the books in Sandsboro."

Satsuma nodded.

"If that pair were out of the way," Mahlin continued, "it would make things a lot easier for us."

Satsuma again nodded assentingly.

"Listen, then," said Mahlin. "When I was under the house there an idea struck me. Do you remember the little toolhouse that we saw down by the landing place?"

"Yes," said Satsuma, who was a person of few words.

"Well, I took a look inside it, you remember. There was nothing much in it except tools—and a box of dynamite."

"Hah!" exclaimed the Japanese comprehendingly, "I understand. A very good idea."

"Suppose," said Mahlin, instinctively lowering his voice, "that we put a few sticks of dynamite underneath that old shack and light the fuse. Eh?" They'd have to collect what was left of Master Naval Lieutenant Hope and the girl with a shovel."

Darkness had fallen before the work of planting the dynamite was completed, for they had to work with the utmost caution in order not to attract the attention of Hope and Cleo, whom they could hear chatting gayly just above them.

"Listen, Jarvis!" Cleo whispered suddenly. "I heard a noise under the house!"

"Nonsense, dear," said Hope. "You're tired and nervous. It must have been the wind—or your imagination."

"It wasn't the wind and it wasn't my imagination. I know I heard something," insisted Cleo. "I'm going to see what it was," and she stepped to the door.

"Quick, Jarvis! Quick!" she called, her voice vibrant with fear. "Come here!" and at her summons he leaped toward her.

As he did so there came a roar which seemed to split the heavens, and the shack, wrenched from its frail supports as though by a giant's hand, trembled for a brief instant on the brink of the cliff and then toppled bodily into the sea.

THE MASS IN THE FOREST

THE DEATH In The FOREST

Jean Avegno Rids the Forest of Saloniki of the Death Which Had Struck Terror to the Hearts of the Woodchoppers and Soldiers.

IT WAS on the outskirts of Saloniki, where the allied forces had burrowed deep into the earth and constructed a series of trenches, protected by entanglements of barbed wire, far more formidable than the lines in Northern France. In front lay the vast plain of Vardar with its fertile fields, and further back the wooded slopes and wild forests.

There was time to choose the location of the trenches in this instance, and the engineers who constructed them had the benefit of the lessons learned in the previous eighteen months' trench warfare, and they took full advantage of these lessons. If ever the campaign of Saloniki becomes a part of the history of the present European madness it will form an interesting chapter.

In other places where the actual fighting has taken place neither side had time to select the location of their trenches. They had to excavate where they happened to be at the time they were stopped. In the case of the Saloniki defenses, there was time to use all the latest improvements in trenches and entanglements. To those who constructed them so carefully and painstakingly it will probably seem a pity if they are never under fire. It would be something similar to the case of the lady who had her doors and windows equipped with a the latest and most up-to-date burglar alarms and then was disappointed that no burglar ever tried to get in.

But out there, somewhere in the dim forest across the plain, where French detachments were on scout duty, there was a something which did not appear to be frightened by the invasion of the West Europe troops. What was it?

When the allies first landed in Saloniki and detachments of troops scoured the forest they heard of this something. "The death in the forest," said a woodchopper who lived on the edge of the stretch of woods. He was an old man, but he was still strong and he always carried a huge knife in his belt.

No, he had never seen the mysterious one himself. He never went far in the forest alone, and no one could approach his hut in a clearing without being seen first. But once, when he and John Garnipoulas had gone into the woods together, they had come across a mangled human shape, lying there on the ground. It was a fellow-woodchopper who was to have helped them at their work that day. Every bone in his body was crushed.

But why? Who could tell? It was the mysterious death in the forest. No one dare venture into those depths alone, because the death was abroad, and the old woodchopper told of other broken bodies found occasionally.

The French lieutenant laughed and shrugged his shoulders and then he and his troop rode on into the depths of the forest. That night they made camp and along about midnight when the watch was changed one of the sentries was found with every bone in his body broken.

"If we rid these woods of this death in the forest we will have accomplished something," thought Private Jean Avegno, who was one of the first to reach the mangled mass of flesh and bones, which a brief time before had been a man and a soldier of France. Thereafter precautions were taken against the creature or whatever it was. But nothing came out of it.

After several weeks in the forest the French detachment was relieved and returned to the barracks on the outskirts of Saloniki. By this time probably every man in the allied army had heard of the mysterious creature, for another soldier who one day wandered a little way from camp did not return, and when a search was made for him next day, his body was found.

Then, again Avegno's troop was sent out into the forest, and as they rode along they discussed the mysterious thing. Avegno was a quiet youngster, fresh from a farm in Picardy. He had once lived in Paris for a few months and had aspired to become a wrestler, but he finally returned to the farm, having met with but little encouragement from the opponents he had met in wrestling shows in the Montmarte section. And then the war came

Now, Walter, the sentry slain that night, had been Avegno's pal, and Jean had silently vowed that he would yet ferret out the mystery of the death, but had said nothing to any of his He had never known fear in his life, not even when the shells of the "Boches" had fallen thick in the trench in which he was a year or more before, back there at home. And he did not fear any terror the forest held in store for him. He had a pistol and in his belt a knife in a sheath.

As he strolled along the heard a solemn chant- companions. He was bright, jolly and always ready for any kind of frolic, as they all were, and yet he never forgot Walter's death.

He was on guard duty the first night of their return to the forest and once he wandered some little distance away from his fellow-sentry. It was dark there in the depths of the forest, and the moon, which was shining brightly, hardly penetrated anywhere. It was all shadows and then deeper shadows. But as Jean finally stopped by a tree he thought he saw a shadow, one of the deeper shadows, move, and none of the shadows there had any right to move, for it was a calm, cool night, with not a breath of air stirring. He watched and the shadow stopped about 30 feet away.

But at this moment Victor, his fellow-guard, called sharply to him. Jean darted forward to where the shadow had stopped, but it seemed to him to melt away, and when he reached the spot there was nothing but the black shades of the overhanging trees.

He said nothing, but next day, it was a Sunday, early in the morning, when he was off duty, he sauntered casually outside the lines of the encampment and plunged into the woods. ing, and, turning in that direction, soon came to a rude Greek chapel, where a priest was saying holy mass. There was little to the chapel save a roof, the rude pillars of which held this up were wreathed with vines and foliage. A score or more of French soldiers, drawn by curiosity, were in the throng of worshipers. Jean crossed himself reverently and stopped a few moments. It was a very solemn and impressive service, there in the depths of the forest, but he did not linger long.

He wandered into the forest for a distance of half a mile, whistling merrily, but keeping his eyes open and listening to every sound. But he neither saw nor heard anything, and finally he halted beneath the low branches of a tree and looked about him.

"I- wonder——,' he thought. There was the slightest rustle in the foliage above him and something dropped from the thick branches onto him. As he crashed to the ground he tried to reach for his knife, but a strong pair of arms was clasped about him and as he struggled on the ground and tried to break their hold the clasp seemed to be growing tighter. But Jean remembered his old wrestling tricks and suddenly he raised his knee, pushed heavily against the body, and as the clasp loosened he twisted himself and broke free. Both sprang to their feet, each with a hand on the other's throat. And Jean gazed into one of the most demoniacal pair of eyes he had ever seen. The creature, it could hardly be called a man, was but partly clothed, and its face was covered with a heavy beard. But there was little time for observation, for, before Jean could reach for his knife, the other threw himself upon him. But Jean was cautious, and he did not give a chance for those strong arms to pinion his own at his side again. He kept himself free from them. Back and forth they struggled, and then crashed to the ground again.

Finding he could not pinion his enemy's arms the creature grasped him by the throat, and for a few seconds—it seemed hours—Jean saw only red and blue and crimson, and then he thought of poor Walter, and with a mighty effort he struck the other full in the pit of the stomach with his knee. The creature loosed his hold and fell back, then sprang at his foe once more, while the latter was struggling to his knees. Instantly Jean's knife flashed from its sheath and he struck.

It was nearly two hours later when he staggered into camp, with two ribs broken, and his clothes half torn from his body. When he had been revived sufficiently he led several of his companions to the spot. The creature was still alive and he was taken to camp, where the stab wound in the breast was treated. It was discovered that his tongue had been cut off and his body was found to be literally covered with welts and bruises. Later he was sent to a near-by village, and his identity was established by his daughter. He had been a woodchopper, and at the outbreak of the last Turko-Grecian war had joined the colors. He took part in an engagement, in which he was captured and he was never heard of again.

It was believed that he had been held as a slave by the Turks, had been mistreated, and, finally, insane from the hardships he had suffered, escaped and returned to the scene of his former life.

But on his dying bed he did not recognize his daughter and no light of reason illumined the dull eyes of the maniac.

It was the day after they returned to Saloniki and Jean was walking, fully recovered from the effects of his battle in the forest, was sitting in front of a cafe on one of the public squares, drinking with several comrades, when he saw his own lieutenant crossing the square to where the general in charge of the French troops was standing, looking over a paper which had just been handed him. The lieutenant approached the general, and Jean saw them talking. Then the two walked toward the little group of privates, who sprang to their feet and saluted. The lieutenant stopped in front of them and called Jean's name. The latter stepped forward.

"My son," said the general, kindly, "I wish to compliment you on your brave deed. At a more fitting time you will be thanked again, but I am glad that you have rid us of an enemy, and what is worse, a terror." And, saluting, he walked on with the lieutenant.

THE LIEUTENANT APPROACHED THE GENERAL

What Has Become of Famous Art Treasures of Amsterdam Galleries?

ALTHOUGH it has been many months since the bombardment of Antwerp, little is known of the fate of the art treasures which were housed there, especially some of the wonderful works of Rubens.

The greatest of these, and the one best known to the tourist and to hundreds of thousands of others, through reproductions, is the "Descent from the Cross," which was in the south transept of the magnificent cathedral. In the north transept was the painter's "Elevation of the Cross."

In the "Descent," the white linen on which the body of the Savior lies forms the keynote of the entire picture. The utter inertness of a dead body is expressively depicted in the figure, and art critics declare that it is in this work that Ruben's genius is exhibited in its best light.

"The Elevation of the Cross," although inferior and less known than the other painting, is a wonderful work, in which the natural attitudes of the various figures is remarkable. Rubens displays his thorough knowledge of anatomy in this and the coloring is rich and harmonious.

The high altar piece of the choir is an "Assumption," by Rubens, while he also has a "Resurrection" in one of the chapels. Other notable paintings in the cathedrals were: "Last Judgment," by J. de Backer; portraits of the Plantin family, by B. Sammeling; portrait of Chris. Plantin, the painter, by W. J. Herryns; "Mater Dolorosa and Group," by A. Quellen, the elder; "Death of the Virgin," by Abr. Matthys; "Marriage of the Virgin," "The Annunciation" and "The Visitation," by M. I. van Bree, and "The Virgin with St. Luke," by A. de Vriendt. Besides these were hundreds of carven pieces by the master artists of the past four centuries and some magnificent stained-glass windows. The Town Hall also contained numerous paintings by the old masters, besides notable examples of wood carving.

The Church of St. Jacques was also rich in art treasures, including paintings, carved wood and marble and stained-glass windows.

In the Royal Museum of Fine Arts were collections of Rubins and Van Dyck paintings, besides many works from the brushes of other Dutch masters and a considerable variety of statuary. "The Christ Crucified Between Two Thieves" was another fine examble of Rubens in the Royal Museum. It represents Longinus, the Roman officer, mounted on a gray horse, piercing the side of the Savior with a lance. The penitent thief is invoking the Savior, while in the foreground, to one side, is the Virgin Mother, whom the wife of Cleophas is endeavoring to console. Mary Magdalene, on her knees before the cross, is imploring the Roman officer to have mercy. Other scriptural works of Rubens here are: "The Prodigal Sun Feeding Upon Husks," "The Virgin Instructed by St. Anne," "The Adoration of the Magi," "The Souls in Purgatory," and "The Holy Trinity."

Van Dyck's "Entombment," in this museum, is well known all over the world through the many copies made of it. The Virgin is represented supporting the head of the dead Christ on her knees, while St. John shows the wound made by the nail in the left hand to two angels, one of whom veils his face.

There are, or were, hundreds of these wonderful paintings in Amsterdam. Were they destroyed or not?

Who never yet has caught a rat,
She is so proud and haughty-like,
I really think she's gone on strike.

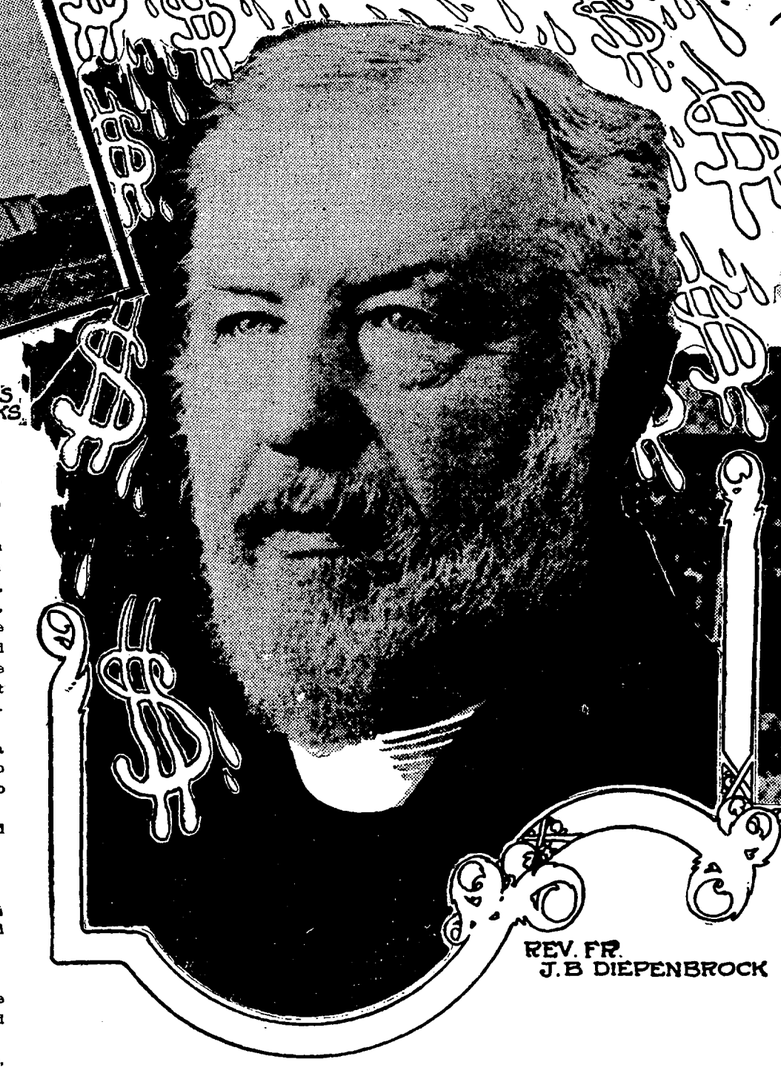
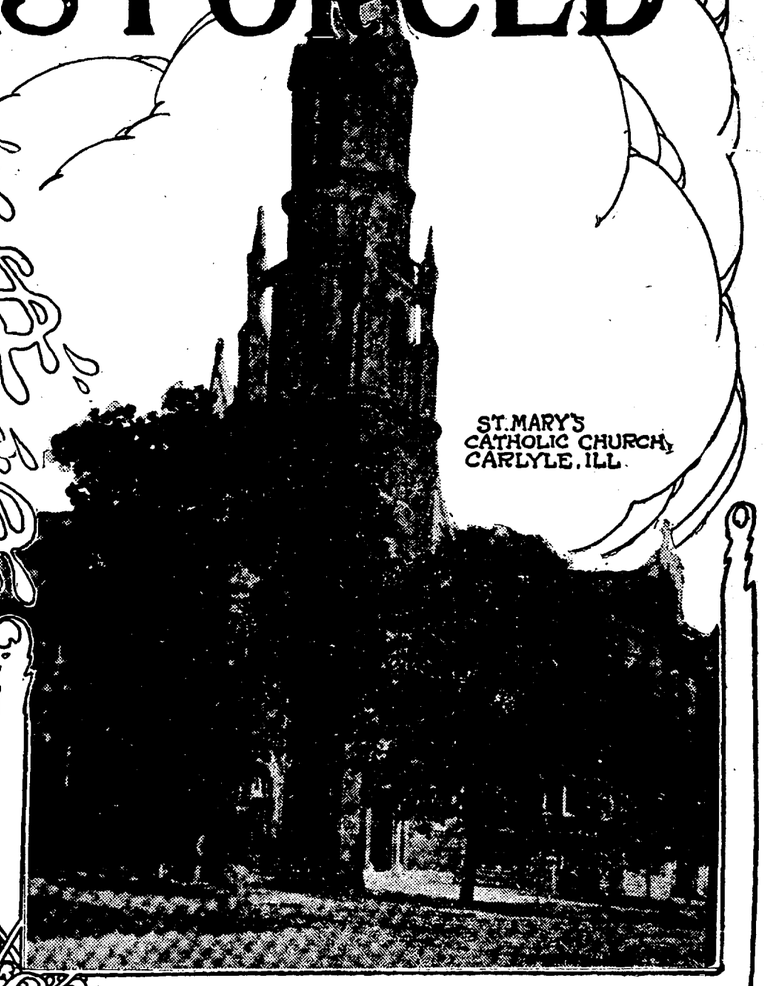
F.B. RANGER'S OIL AND GAS TANKS.

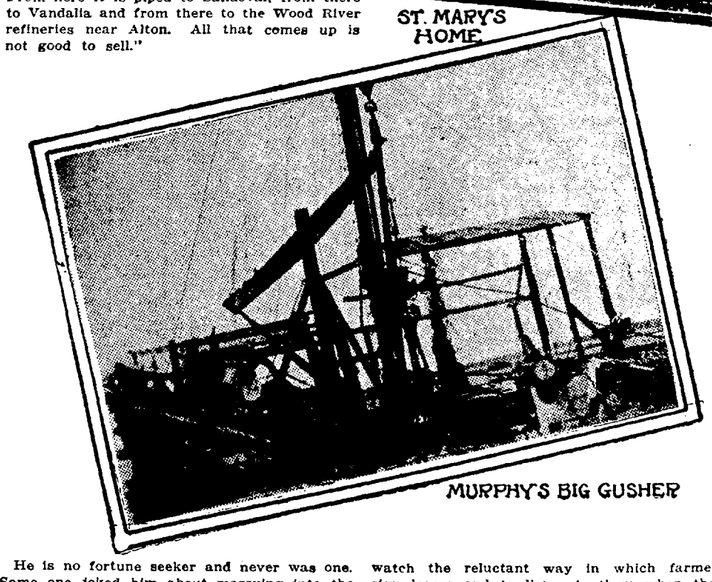


REV. FR. J.B DIEPENBROCK



ST. MARY'S CATHOLIC CHURCH, CARLYLE, ILL.

ST. MARY'S HOME



MURPHY'S BIG GUSHER

BY ROSE MARION BOYLAN.

REV. FATHER J. B. DIEPENBROCK, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church in Carlyle, Clinton County, Ill., is enjoying, with his parish, a steady flow of dollars from oil on a farm he was forced to buy when he did not have the money to spare.

Many are the lives that have been changed by the oil boom of five years ago in Carlyle, but Father Diepenbrock goes on much the same as ever, except he now has more means with which to carry on his work as pastor. His church is one of the handsomest in the diocese of Belleville.

Father Diepenbrock, who was born in Germany but ordained in America as was his brother, who is pastor of a church in a Missouri parish near Jefferson city, went to Carlyle from Cairo, Ill., before the cyclone of 1905. He succeeded Rev. Father Anton Deninger, who had been the pastor there for thirty years. The cyclone destroyed all the churches in Carlyle, including St. Mary's, but none of the saloons. Kindly it left the school of the parish.

Carlyle men say they never saw a more gloom stricken person than Father Diepenbrock the day after the cyclone. It was his duty to rebuild his church. He knew that many of his parishioners were farmers and that their crops had not been good for years. He took up his task without grumbling but Father Diepenbrock was subjected to a trial that he hopes will not be his again. The story goes like this:

Wife Tells of Worry.

One afternoon in 1910, Father Diepenbrock and a member of his parish drove out into the country to visit parishioners. They arrived at the farm of Clement Schwierjohann, where lived the son of the owner and his wife. Father Diepenbrock noticed that the young wife seemed ill at ease. Although she tried to be courteous, she seemed deeply worried and could not take much interest in the conversation.

At last he asked her the cause of her worry. She replied: "We shall have to move, father. Clement's parents have sold this home and we can stay here no longer."

Having told her story she could not keep from weeping. She explained, whenever her tears would let her, that she liked the place and did not wish to find a new home.

Father Diepenbrock is a sympathetic man and understanding the regret with which women leave the places where they have been happy, the houses which they entered as brides, where their children were born and where they have nursed them in happy and sad times, he began to ask questions about the sale. Many a time and oft in the days that came he wished that he had not been solicitous.

Young Mrs. Schwierjohann explained that a farmer from St. Rose township wished to buy the land and had already entered into an agreement with her husband's father.

"How much will he pay for it?" asked Father Diepenbrock.

Mrs. Schwierjohann named the price.

"That isn't enough," said the priest. "Thi is a good farm and is worth more than that. Why even I," he continued jokingly, "would give more than that for it."

Owner Visits Priest.

Mrs. Schwierjohann seemed soothed by the interest of her guests and not long afterward they departed for Carlyle.

A few days later Clement Schwierjohann, the owner of the farm, rang the door bell of Father Diepenbrock's residence, which is one of the residences of Carlyle which has marked individuality. It was as far back from the street as the length of the large church. To its porch leads a walk of red flagging. At this season of the year a great bed of tulips is in bloom on one side of the yard. On the other is a large grotto in which is a prie-dieu, statues of the Blessed Virgin, and vases of flowers.

At one end of the house is a greenhouse. Vines grow about the home and in the windows are white curtains trimmed with crocheted lace. Miss Catherine Diepenbrock, a sister of the priest, is his housekeeper. His assistant, Rev. Father Dietrick, who has been stationed in Carlyle for a quarter of a century, resides with him.

Father Diepenbrock welcomed Clement Schwierjohann but was surprised when that man said:

"Here's your deed."

"My deed!" exclaimed the priest. "My deed to what?"

"Your deed to my farm," continued the other. "You said you would give more for my farm than that man from St. Rose, so I canceled my agreement with him and have had the deed made out to you."

Father Diepenbrock examined the deed and found that all was as Schwierjohann had said.

Those were not happy days for the priest, who was in his 59th year. He did not tell even his closest friends about the affair, but worried about it in silence. At last he conferred with Frederick Schlafly, president of the First National Bank of Carlyle. He told Schlafly that he wished to borrow some money. Schlafly replied, "All right."

That was before the days of the oil boom. In those big oil days the officers of the bank had to act unsurprised when men asked them to cash checks for $50,000. But that time was in the future, and Schlafly was somewhat surprised when the loan asked for was $9700. He had no question about lending that amount to Father Diepenbrock, but loans of that size were not everyday occurrences.

When the requested few days were over and Schwierjohann visited the priest's house again the money was ready for him. He turned over the deed and shortly after removed to Mississippi, where he has since died.

Less than six months after the farm became the priest's oil was found in the neighborhood, and Father Diepenbrock's farm was among those leased by a company that paid one-eighth of the receipts to the owner. In less than a year Father Diepenbrock had paid his loan from the bank and was receiving a steady income from his wells. Conservative men say that his average receipts have been $500 a month since the discovery of oil five years ago. At times it has been greater than this, and at other times less.

Handsome Church Built.

St. Mary's handsome church has been completed, and men of the parish say that no one knows just how much it cost. Father Diepenbrock has never mentioned how much of his money has been paid for the beautification of the house of God, but men who know values in church property say that it has been no inconsiderable amount.

In the church is a beautiful stained-glass window dedicated to the memory of his parents. The motif of the window is the Visitation. The Blessed Virgin is shown arriving at the home of St. Elizabeth. Near the door is the aged father of St. John. But for this window no credit is given the priest. Beneath the picture in glass are these words, "In memory of the parents of Catherine Diepenbrock."

Carlyle men say that Father Diepenbrock has not hoarded his income, but has given gladly of it to charities. One of his beneficiaries is St. John's Orphanage, Glen Addle, near Belleville, Ill. This is the home where the orphans of his parish are cared for by the sisters known as the Poor Handmaidens of Christ.

Other stories of the oil days are revived just now because a new strike is expected.

Old Home Good Enough.

The largest amount from the oil fields was realized and is continuing to be realized by Leo Deters when one excepts the men from other cities. Deters' farm continues to contribute barrels of oil by night and day to the receiving tanks with the exception of Sundays. Some rule in the agreement with the oil companies gives even automatic oil pumps a day of rest.

Deters resides in the last house on that street of Carlyle which leads towards the oil country. It was a large house before he became wealthy. He neither tore it down nor bought another one. His old house was good enough for him. He had it repaired and repainted. He bought an automobile. That's a rule in the oil country. When the oil begins to run in paying amounts the landowners buy machines. Just outside of Carlyle is a mile of state road that makes spinning a delight.

The Deters' country home is in charge of his son-in-law, Frank Ortman, who cares for one of the pump houses on the farm. Ortman is proud of the way his gas engine runs. The oil has also given the farms natural gas for heating and lighting purposes.

"We haven't had a lamp in our house for five years," said Ortman, as he showed just how big a blaze the gas in his furnace can make. This engine runs the "merry-go-round" in the pump house, a wheel placed laterally which controls fourteen pumps. The pumps are scattered about the field, in a fashion that seems careless to one who knows little about the varying performances of oil. From each well there is a rod that connects with the wheel in the pump house and to stand at the pump house and watch the automatic working of these rods that radiate from the pump house is a certain kind of amusement.

In broad daylight it is, but men who live in the oil country and do not own wells say that it is weird to be driving about in the night and hear that constant "chug-chug" of the pumps, the rods and the gas engines.

On still nights, and most nights are still ones in that section of Clinton County, the working of this machinery, which continues while men sleep, can be heard three miles away in Carlyle.

Should a pumpstation stop, so accustomed are the families, who reside near them, to the constant sound of the machinery, its very cessation causes them to waken.

Should a break occur at night there would be no further injury to the machinery and no waste of oil. Only a delay in the pumping of oil that means money.

Near the pumphouse that Ortman minds there is an oil tank into which the oil from the pumps flows. One has to climb a ladder to see the streams of water and oil flowing up and then into the tank. The water always comes up when the oil does. The water is made to flow away into a pond that each pumphouse must possess. In the beginning the oily water was allowed to run away as it pleased and it flowed into streams and ponds of fresh water and it is said that it caused the death of fish, and for that reason state rules prohibiting this practice were enforced.

This oil water is destructive to vegetation and gives out an odor that is especially noticeable when the sun shines hot or when there is an extra amount of humidity. There are those who say they can smell the oil all the way to Carlyle, but most of them have no wells of their own. Men interested in oil say that odor is from the gas burned.

Ortman washed his hands in the oil of the tank and they came out with a brownish color but little odor. He said, "This oil has to travel a long way before it's fit to be used. From here it is piped to Sandoval, from there to Vandalia and from there to the Wood River refineries near Alton. All that comes up is not good to sell."

He is no fortune seeker and never was one. Some one joked him about marrying into the family of the man to whom the oil gave more than any one else. Then the joker, who was fair minded, corrected himself with, "But you were married before the oil came." Ortman agreed that he was. He was a farmer before the oil find. All through the busy period he teamed for the oil men. Teaming was worth $5 a day then, which was more money than one could get out of the overworked farms.

Oil Money Brings Music.

Later Ortman took charge of the pumping station for his father-in-law, having learned its management while working in the field. He keeps the pumphouse, which has a granitoid floor, as clean as a Clinton County kitchen, and is as proud of his gas engine as a bride would be of an electric stove. He and his family live in the big brick Deters farmhouse and the children go to school eight months in the year.

In response to the question, "Does it feel just as good to make oil come into tanks as it does to plant and raise corn?" Ortman replied, "Just as good," and there was implication that it was a great deal more interesting financially.

The oil money has brought other music to Clinton County than that "chug-chug" of the rods and pumps which, however, is said to be the sweetest kind of music to the well owners.

In many homes are player pianos that cost as much as $500, while in others there are expensive phonographs and some real instruments for the children who were young enough to learn music when the good times came in.

They say that it is almost amusing to watch the reluctant way in which farmers sign leases and to listen to them when they tell of sleepless nights in which they worry about farms desecrated by holes in the ground. The real fun, however, comes when oil is found near their farms, and to use the language of a man who knows how much talking one has to do in order to secure a lease, "When oil is found on the next farm, then that same man who worried so much about the damage that would be done his old farm, will want the prospectors to sink a well right by his front porch, even if the famly has to go out the back way the rest of their lives. He wouldn't mind having a well in his kitchen if only it would bring in the money."

Some men, who have productive wells, have not left their farms or their farming. Since the wells interfere with farming to a certain extent, it being impossible to cultivate the district about a well because of the interference of the rods, many of the farmers have gone to raising stock, especially cows. Other farmers, without wells, have done likewise and the dairy business is good around Carlyle. Meanwhile the farm ground is having a needed vacation.

How Oil Was Found.

Here's the way they tell it to strangers: "One day a man named Frank Ranger came to town. He was an oil prospector and he was so near broke that he couldn't pay for his board after he'd been here for two weeks. He went out into the country looking for leases. When you get a lease from a farmer it is usual to offer him one-eighth of the returns of his oil if oil is found. A small amount is paid to hold the lease. When he had gotten a block of leases he found a man with the necessary machinery who was willing to take a chance. Get money if there was oil. Get nothing if there was none.

"His man with the machinery went to work on the Smith farm, owned by Mrs. Maria Smith. They set up a rig and put in the iron piece that pounds the ground and the rock until it reaches the depth necessary to find oil.

"All this buying leases brought other prospectors to town and a rig was set upon the Murphy farm. The big flow came to Laird first, the man who was behind the prospecting on the Murphy farm. But oil had already been found on the farm of Mrs. Maria Smith in good sized quantities.

"As soon as the news went out, Carlyle changed from a county seat to an imitation of Broadway and Nome, Alaska, combined. Such crowds came to Carlyle that they couldn't walk on the sidewalk, they walked in the street and it was crowded all the time. You couldn't get into a saloon. The lunch counters sold sandwiches and coffee all day and part of the night. The Truesdail Hotel was so crowded that you couldn't move in the lobby. The banks kept open from 7 in the morning until 6 o'clock at night and the bankers are tired yet when they talk about how hard they worked.

"It got so that we quit speaking to people on the street. We had always spoken to everybody, because we knew everybody, but there were so many strangers that it seemed strange to see home folks.

"Money was carried around in bundles and suit cases. In most instances it was impossible to deal with farmers, especially after the oil began to flow, without real money.

Some Hold Out Too Long.

"Some men made the mistake of holding out too long. That happened to the Deters' school district. The prospectors wanted a plot in the school yard and they made an offer to the school directors. The directors wanted more but before the prospectors agreed to their terms the plot was no longer desired and the district lost its chance.

The County Farm was more fortunate. Its bit was $12,000. St. Mary's Home for the Aged is not even on the oil side of Carlyle, but the oil find is said to have been a good thing for its funds. Wealthy men who came to Carlyle and made more money remembered to give some of it to the home where the old are ending their lives.

"Ranger came to this town, as I said, almost broke. He found oil, and when he went away he owned $300,000 and three automobiles. I have heard since that he has lost everything. His wife asked for and was given a divorce. Then he married his stenographer. She was with him when he was in Carlyle."

"GOOD RIDDANTS" EDDYTORIUL

We hate like everythink to polloot the collums of a clean respecktable newspaper like the Bingville Bugle with enythink that has ever been printed in that pusilanimus & ignominious rag of a sheet knowd as the Hardscrabble Banner but there dont seem to be no way to git outen it in this instants so read the follering whitch is copied from the Banner of last wk:

"Mr. William A. Simpson, wife and five childern, have took up their residence amongs us and will make Hardscrabble their home in the fuchure. The Simpson family moved here from Bingville where they lived for the past three years. Mr. Simpson in a interview with the Editor of the Banner stated that he was rejoiced to get away from such a 1-horse town as Bingville where there aint enny opportoonities for a man of genius to make a living being as Bingville is dead in the shell and its inhabitants a lot of narrer minded old fogies. Mr. Simpson has stopped taking the Bingville Bugle whitch he says aint fit to read ennyhow, and has subscribed for the Banner. We welcome Mr. Simpson and family to our midst."

When we 1st read the above in the Hardscrabble Banner we consiederd that being as it was wrote by a human wart on the fase of nachure it was beneath our notis and desided that we would treat it with silent contemt, but the more we tride to treat it with silent contemt the madder we got so we take our vitriolick pen in hand to anser it.

Hardscrabble is welcome to William A. Simpson, wife and five childern. We aint got nothink aginst Mrs. Simpson and the childern—Mrs. Simpson is a mighty sight too good for her husband and allus was—in our opinyun her little finger is wuth moren a duzzen Bill Simpsonses. (Speshial Notis—We nevver cald him "William A. Simpson" in Bingville—we allus cald him "Bill" and other names that aint fit to print.)

We notis that Bill Simpson tells the Hardscrabble Banner editor that he is rejoiced to git away from Bingville. If Bill is enney more rejoiced to git away from Bingville than Bingville is to have him depart, then Bill must be almost to happy for utterents. Bill says there aint no opportoonities for his genius in Bingville. About the only genius Bill manifested during the two yrs he lived in Bingville was for loafin in the shade durin the day and lootin hen roosts at night while decent folks was asleep. While Bill was in our midst it wassent safe for a hen to go to sleep at nites and sinst he has disapeard folks can git up in the morning knowing that when they count their chickens there wont be none missing. If there aint a decrease in the hen populashion of Hardscrabble from now on well we miss our guess.

We note what Bill said about stoppin the Bingville Buggle becuz it wassent fit to read and subscribin for the Hardscrabble Banner. Our books shows us that Bill peard to think that the Bugle was fit to read during the three yrs he lived here being as it was sent to him prompt evry wk and being as he stopped his paper without paying us a red ct on his back subscripshion. Now he says it aint fit to read. We should think that most enny kind of a newspaper that diddent cost a person ennythink would be fit to read. If Bill Simpson cals the Hardscrabble Banner fit to read we dont consider him mutch of a judge of good litterchoor that's all.

We repeat that Hardscrabble is welcome to Bill Simpson and as far as Bingville is concernd him leaving here was a good riddants of bad rubbish.

Lokal Items

As we go to press with this ishue of the Bugle we observe that it is quite warmish. In other words a person perspires very freely without makin mutch effort to do so. Hank Dewberry he says let them swet who wants to as for him hell stick to the shade and wont moove unless it does.

There was a shower last Sunday but there wassent enuff rain fell to even lay the dust. It clouded up like everythink and lookd as if it was agoing to pour, then the rain peterd out. We dont like to be misled in this tidicklus manner.

Miss Milly Underwood whilst sitting very quiet amongs the other members of the quoir at church last Sabbath morning had a mouse to run acrost her foot and Milly gives a awful screech jest at the most sollum porshion of Rev. Moores sermon. The other girls in the quoir diddent get a glimpst of the mouse or they would of probably screeched also.

Bige Barker was complainin down to Hen Weathersbys store last night becuz the potater bugs gnaws off his potater tops as fast as they sprout. Bige says he calkilates the bugs set there waitin for the tops to shoot outen the ground. Bige purchased some pizen at the store and says hes goin to sprinkle his potater tops with it and see how the potater bugs likes that for a change of diet.

Lime Peterson cleaned out his well last wk and found one of his old rubber boots in the bottom of it along with consderable other rubbish. Lime says its all clear to him now why the water from that well has tasted so pecooliar in the past being as it diddent taste nacheral. Lime says he aint no idee how that rubber boot got into the well.

Hez Underwood while chopping wood last wk tride to chop through a knot into a tree but what Hez thort was a knot prooved to be a stone whitch in some manner the tree had growd around. Hez says you ort to of saw the sparks fly when he hit that stone with the sharp edge of his axe. The axe was ruind.

Although we have kept purty close watch we aint notised enny persont subscribing for the Bugle recent. Unless we can manage to git a few new subscribers who will pay cash strickly in advance in the not fur distant fuchure we may have to close up shop or go into bankrupsy.

"Lokal Squibs" aint what you might call very profuse in our midst this wk. Either that or else some "Lokal Squibs" has happend that we aint happend to hear of. Anyone hearing of any "Lokal Squibs" at any time kindly advise us of same.

Rekt His Bootjack

Old Anse Smiley had a curius thing to happen to him last Tuesday night about 8 p. m. whilst he was removing his boots from his feet perparatory to retiring for the night.

In order to remoove his boots in the manner to whitch he had been accustomd Anse used his bootjack whitch he has used for this purpose for the past 20 yrs. Anse put his right boot in the bootjack and heaved back but instid of the boot comin off the bootjack split right down the middle and Anse went heels over head into the open fire place and butted his head agin the bricks with great vilence.

Anse had been workin out in the wet most of the day and his boots had shrunk up on him. As a result he couldnt get em off nohow even with his wifes assistants and at last he went to bed with em on in disgust and diddent git em offen his feet until the follering evg after they had expanded suffishent.

Enos McCrackens old cow "Spot" wanderd through the front gate of Widder Skinner residence and trampt up her pansy bed afore the Widder could drive her out agin. Why dont Enos keep his cows up instid of permittin em to wander around loose a menace to gardens and pansy beds?

Hank Dewberry while baiting his hook in a hurry over to Gootchic Pond last Sunday where he was fishin after havin a big fish skin all the bait offen his hook axidentally run the hook into his thum and had a turrible time getting it out. By the time Hank got his hook rebaited the fish was probly at the other end of the pond. His thum was all Hank ketchd during the day.

Miss Phoebe Hilderbrand our fashionable dressmaker & seemstress wishes to a nounce that she has jest recd a catalog of fall latest styles to be wore next fall & is perpared to show same to the aleet of Bingville who contemplates having new dresses made.

Eph Higgins our accommodating p. m. says that the dating stamp whitch he uses to date the letters whitch is mailed at the Bingville P. O. has been hammerd so mutch that it is wore down until a person couldn't tell whether the letter was mailed at Bingville or where. Eph says he has wrote the Guvverment in a polite manner twict askin for a new dating stamp but aint heerd from em yet and unless he does hell write the P. M. general a sharp letter that hell bet will wake em up at Washington.

Lem Brown our expert carpenter while planing off a board in his carpenter shop tother day [illegible] a slice of his thum whi[illegible] everything. Lem says in justice to the plane hell haft to say that the blade of it was sharp as a razzer.

Old Dad Henderson says he dont know as he can stand it to go without a haircut until fall being as during this hot wether his long crop of hair keeps his head awful hot and gives him a headake, but Dad says if he can only hold out until cooler wether then he can hold out until next spring. Dad says that all he has paid out for haircuts during the past five yrs is $1.25. Twict his wife cut his hair for him and that was clear gain.

Heck Smoked Out

Heck Winslow one of our most respeckted cittizens come down town tother morning after breakfast with his eyes red & wortering and when we askd Heck if he had a cold he told us no it wassent that.

It seems the night before when Heck went to retire he raised the winder of his room whitch had been kep down to keep the muskeeters out to let in a leetle fresh air and while the fresh air was comin in a swarm of muskeeters enterd also and after Heck had put down the winder and composed hisself for sleep as we might say the muskeeters begin to work on him & bit & pesterd him to sitch a extent that he finally got up and got a old tin pail and burnt a smudge in the room whitch was so full of smoke that Heck set on the edge of the bed haff the night nearly coffin his fool head offen his shoulders and then and his eyes smartin and finally he went out to the barn and slep in the hay until daylight.

Bud Went Fishing

Bud he found a old fish hook somewheres so he tied it onto the end of a long peece of twine and on the fish hook he put a grain of corn.

Then Bud he dropd the hook with the grain of corn on it out in the back yard and hid behint a rose bush at tother end of the string. Bye and bye Hinckleys old dominecker rooster come along and soon as he seen that grain of corn he nacherly grabd it not havink sense enuff to know that there was a fish hook connecktd with it.

Soon as the rooster tuk the hook with the corn on it into his mouth Bud give a yank on the string to set the hook and then the fun begin. The rooster puld and hauld and flapped his wings and skwawked while Bud jumpd out from behint the rosebush and begin to drag the rooster tords him by broot force if necessary. All the time Bud kept hollerin and laffin, "Ive ketchd a big fish this time!"

Soon as Buds mother heerd the commoshion she run out into the yard and ketchd the rooster and after a spell suckseeded in gettin the hook outen his mouth after whitch she let him go. Then Mrs. Hinckley procured a shingle and conduckted Bud into the woodshed shutting the door behint them. Judging from the wails and groans and moans and yells whitch emenated from the woodshed and could be heerd all over Bingville we persoom Mrs. Hinckley chastized her son considerable.

Calamitty for Mrs. Ame

Mrs. Ame Hillyer wife of our talented loryer, leggal light J. of the P. et ctery met with a sad loss last Tuesday.

Mrs. Hillyer was engaged in making a kettle full of lye soap for domestick purposes and while she was biling same out in the yard blamed if the kettle diddent upset without enny warning and spild evry mite of the soap in it. This was a awful blow to Mrs. Hillyer who has the sympathy of the entire communitty in her sad bereavement concerning her loss of the sope.

Notis!

We regret to state that their aint no "Country Correspondence" in this ishue of the Bugle. We persoom the reason for this consists largely of the fact that no country correspondence has been received and hope this will be regarded as a suffishent reason by our subscribers.

The reason we call attenshion here that there aint no "Country Correspondence" in this ishue of the Bugle is because if we diddent do so you might not notice their absents.

As a general rule there is a few news items from some adjining settlement in the Bugle evry wk but this wk is a excepshion to the general rule. Praps the reason we aint heerd from enny of our correspondents whitch writes items for the Bugle from towns & villages hereabouts is that their too bizzy to write, or praps its too hot to write or praps they have some other excoose jest as good. Be that as it may the fackt remains that we aint heerd from none of em, but by next wk we hope to have a hole batch of "Country Correspondence" to print in the Bugle so have pashients until next wk or the wk after.

P. S.—Jest as we go to press we have recd several items from our correspondent at Pea Ridge but theyre too late for publicashion in this ishue. On the other hand we have read over these items and there aint ennythink of enny importance amongs em ennyhow. EDDITOR BUGLE.

CHICAGO GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

Chicago, July 1.—Absence of selling pressure resulted today in a decided upturn in quotations on wheat. Bulls were encouraged by Liverpool advices that the European demand for the new American crop had improved and was continuing to broaden.

Opening prices, which ranged from ⅝c off to ¼c up, with July at $1.01 to $1.01⅝, and September at $1.04⅝ to $1.04⅞, were followed by a material advance all around.

Corn rose owing to a lack of deliveries and to the lightness of offerings. After opening at ⅜c decline to ⅛c advance, the market made moderate general gains.

Sympathy with the strength of other grain hardened oats. Buying, however, was only scattered.

Higher prices on hogs gave firmness to provisions. Deliveries of lard were heavy but went into the hands of packers and other big interests.

PICTURES WHAT HIS SOUL WENT THROUGH

On his bed, in the base hospital at Columbus, N. M., Sam H. Harris, one of the tragically few American survivors of the massacre of Carrizal, consented to write the account of his experience during this historic battle in northern Mexico for the correspondent of this newspaper. The official reports of this battle have been very meager—what really happened to the brave soldiers of the Tenth cavalry, and how they met their fates, has not yet been told. This story by Trooper Harris is the first and only real document to describe this.—Editor.

By SAM H. HARRIS.

Columbus, N. M., July 1.—I am going to carry the memory of the fight at Carrizal with me as long as I live, and I reckon that will be some time because the wound in my shoulder is getting along fine now. It doesn't make any difference what I do or what I try to think about, I am always seeeing the awful fight at Carrizal—but not the way it has been written about in the newspapers.

I may not be able to write about Carrizal that way or the way that battles were described in the red history book I used to study in Elizabethtown, back in Kentucky, where I came from. But I will try to tell you here what it is actually to live through a fight in which you know that the chances are ten to one that your death is only a matter of a few minutes.

Death—that is what you want to happen to the dirty devils that are all around you—so it won't happen to you.

There wasn't one of us who was thinking about death that day when we rode in column fours toward Carrizal, and then all of a sudden there it was—death right out in front of us!

For a short time death wasn't behind us.

But not a man attempted to get away by the one route left open. Why, the way those boys stood up and faced death from hundreds of rifles and a machine gun that poured out bullets faster than all the rifles in Carrizal was wonderful. If the folks in heaven can see what we are doing down here, I know that Abe Lincoln was proud of all those boys and the way they fought for the country he did so much for.

Every time I think of the battle it seems strange to me that all the men were not excited. It was the horses that lost their heads. I know that only too well, for the position I was assigned to was holding horses. If you ever tried to hold a scary horse by the head when an automobile is going past, you will have just the beginning of an idea of what it was to held eight horses under fire for the first time.

I owe a lot to my horse, for he saved me from those treacherous Mexicans, although at first he caused me so much trouble that I couldn't put him on the line with the other horses.

I was busy taking care of the horses most of the time, but I did a lot of thinking, and I remember it just as well as if the fight had only taken place a few minutes ago.

I was saying to myself as the fight began—just as cool as though I was home—this sure will mean war with Mexico because Carranza won't be able to explain away these men who are being killed. Then I began to wonder how many of the boys the "greasers" got.

"My God," I said, "there goes a machine gun!

"It must hurt to get a bullet through your head!

"D—— that white faced horse! I'd give him something to rear for if I had him back in Kentucky!

"It doesn't look much like Kentucky for me again!

"If I ever see real grass again I sure will take root!

"Why do these Spicks want to live or fight for a country that's so hot and dry?"

Just then I heard Bob, a big fellow in our company, shout: "I've got seven of the greasers!" And somebody yelled in reply: "Seben come eleben."

The horses had quieted down a little and I decided to use my own automatic I got one Mexican and funny as it seems now I began wondering what the boys back home would think if they knew I was away off in Mexico shooting Mexicans——and no danger of being arrested for it! This, I told myself, was killing that ought to be done and had to be done. If I didn't shoot them, they would shoot me.

And then they did.

Smash went something against my left shoulder and into it all at once. If you have ever been hit across the shoulder with a big stick, you will know how it feels to be shot in the shoulder, only the smash keeps up.

I had to leave go all the horses except my own, which I had fastened to my right arm with my lariat. A lot of men were down. I couldn't do any more shooting with my left arm useless, so I decided to make a run for it on my horse.

But it was easier to decide to make a dash for it out of that circle of death than to get into the saddle. How I cussed that horse as he backed and dragged me this way and that!

I hadn't had my horse long enough to give him a name, and anyway he was a Mexican horse. Once he almost stepped on somebody lying on the ground. I stopped and saw that it was Big Bob—dead.

A greaser bullet had got him in the neck. But it was the big red spot on the ground beside him that I will remember till it is my time to go. And I wondered why Big Bob had to go. He was the sort of man who seemed to be able to do everything better than anyone else. It was Bob who could manage any horse. It was Bob who could shoot seven Mexicans. It was Bob who could shoot craps better than any other man in the company.

Something went through me when I saw Bob lying there, giving me a sort of strength that the horse seemed to feel. He stopped his backing. I got my foot into the stirrup, threw my leg over the saddle and dug in my spurs.

Those greasers! I swore I would go through their line, and I was sorry I could not take Bob with me.

I guided the horse for a spot where there seemed to be fewer Mexicans than anywhere else on the part of the line I was heading for. I was hanging low over my horse's neck when up rose two Spicks from behind a bush. Before they could get their guns to their shoulders smash went my horse against them!

I had a fleeting glimpse of those two Mexicans rolling in the dirt, then swish-s-sh—a bullet passed my face and ploughed its way through the upper part of my horse's neck.

That horse was all horse. He kept on and on, with the blood slowly working its way down his neck, and reddening the white sweat that covered his forelegs. But the Mexicans who followed me on horseback at last gave up the chase.

From the time I escaped from the circle of bullets at Carrizal until I got to Colonia Dublan I lived the terrible battle of Carrizal over and over again.

Now I know that the actual fighting is not the only part of a battle that has to be endured. There are the awful memories and the awful dreams.

HARRISON HILL LOTS AT REMARKABLE PRICES

After an inspection of Harrison Hill addition, located on Calhoun street directly south of Rudisill boulevard, most people are surprised to find that the lots in this addition, including all improvements, are sold at a price which does not exceed $22.00 per front foot. It is indeed remarkable that a tract of this character can be platted so as to include practically every modern development advocated by city planning experts and marketed at this figure. Harrison Hill has been layed out and the lots are now being sold by the firm of Hilgeman and Schaaf, located in the North American building, who were responsible for Arcadia Court and several other of the higher class additions of this city.

London, July 1.—After weeks of intense bombardment with guns of every calibre, firing a million shells daily, the British early this morning launched a general offensive against the German line along a front of twenty miles north of the River Somme. They succeeded in taking the German front line trenches and capturing many men.

The French on the British right co-operate in the attack, when the last dispatches thus far received left British headquarters the fighting was still progressing and further successes, it was said, were being recorded.

The front for the offensive was decided on many weeks ago and the bombardment of the rest of the line, as well as the frequent raids which procured for British headquarters important information as to the disposition of the Germans, was designed to keep the German generals uncertain as to the point at which they would be called upon to meet the brunt of the attack.

Was Well Advertised.

This is the first time since the outbreak of the war that the intention of an army to undertake an offensive has been so well advertised. A week ago, when the German attacks against Verdun began to make further progress and it was feared the army of the crown prince was getting within a distance of Verdun which was dangerous for the allies, the British guns began to speak. Since then, except for the hours when British infantrymen were raiding German trenches, a continual bombardment has been maintained.

On the west of the Meuse fighting of great violence lasted throughout the night in the neighborhood of Eisen-Avocourt road. The Germans attacked heavily both east and west of Hill 304, but most of their attacks were repulsed. Nancy was bombarded by German long range guns.

The vigorous counter-stroke by which the French have wrested back from the Germans the Thiaumont redoubt north of Verdun means, according to military operations, not only a serious loss to the enemy in position but an even more serious loss in the matter of time.

The growing activity of the British on a long line on the western front increases the odds against the Germans capturing the Meuse fortress.

A loss of Thiaumont is considered as throwing the Germans back at least ten days. As the work commands the Vaux ravine, without its possession the Germans cannot progress in their task of sapping the first inner line defenses on the Froide Terrehax Souville front.

The French plan of attack was successfully matured in secret as no special preliminary bombardment preceded it. The French forces massed gradually and the enemy was taken as much unaware as is possible under present conditions. The dash of the storming party was so well timed and speedy that its work was done before the German curtain of fire could be adequately stopped.

The Germans were rapidly cleared out of the trenches and defenses prepared for the inevitable counter-attacks which were promptly delivered with desperate attacks.

The Frenchmen had, however, held out long enough to enable fresh troops to come up and these again won back the redoubt, which is now entirely in French hands. The Germans are making strenuous efforts to recapture it and there was desperate fighting last night but so far the Germans have had no success.

Wreck All Within Range.

Batteries, which are now innumerable, took turns at smashing the German defense, destroying communication trenches and blowing up ammunition depots. New trench mortars, particularly destructive, tore away wire entanglements, broke down parapets and generally opened the way for men with rifles and bayonets. Big guns of fifteen inches and other large calibres prevented the Germans from bringing up supports, wrecking everything within range.

The artillery fire was particularly intense on a stretch of the front north of the Somme. Earlier dispatches told of the destruction of the towns of Thiepval and Beaucourt, where the Germans had concentrated ammunition.

Fiercest of the War.

Early this morning more guns were brought into action on this twenty mile sector, and for an hour and a half the Germans were subject to a bombardment which is described as the fiercest experienced in this war of heavy artillery.

The news of the British offensive which was quickly circulated in London, created the greatest enthusiasm and details of the battle are anxiously awaited. Only this morning the correspondents warned the public that an advance must be made by infantry and not by artillery and that the British army could not expect to come out of the engagement scathless. First accounts of the battle, however, state that the British casualties were not heavy.

The news spread throughout London like wildfire. There was a frantic rush to obtain special editions of the evening newspapers. Along the Strand and other thoroughfares there was a turmoil of excitement. From the tops of buses, passengers, especially soldiers, cheered the tidings which had been awaited so eagerly. Men and women in little groups scanned the special editions, then broke out in cheers of joy.

Allied Offensive Scores Heavily in First Five Hours.

British Headquarters in France, July 1.—(1:00 p. m.)—Reports received from the front up to 12:30 o'clock, five hours after the combined French and British offense was launched, showed that the allies had captured the towns of Labotselle, Zerre and Montauban, and Curlu and Faviere woods.

The main first line trenches over the entire front under attack are reported to have been stormed, and at various points the fighting has reached the main second line.

These reports show that the French and British, at the points of their furthest advances, have broken through a distance of more than five miles beyond the first German trenches. Montauban is five and one-half miles east of the old British front, and Curlu wood is six miles east-southeast of Albert.

The British are endeavoring to surround Thiepval and at other points the struggle is under way for towns and villages. Reports from the front indicate that the important German position at Fricourt may be cut off.

The terrific bombardment which preceded the attack lasted about an hour and a half. It is too early as yet to give any but the barest particulars of the fighting which is developing in intensity. The British casualties have so far been comparatively light according to official report.

The artillery bombardment of the last few days was concentrated this morning with a degree of fury and a number of guns which were unprecedented in the region of Albert and the Somme, with the French co-operating to the south.

At this hour the British are making good progress behind the front lines in German held territory. Serre and Montauban, which the British have captured, are important tactical points. Serre is southeast of Hebutern and Montauban is northwest of Bray. The British are fighting for the villages of Mametz and Contalmaison, portions of which they hold.

The French advancing on the British right, are moving with great steadiness. After the assault they very quickly covered a distance of two kilometres beyond the German front line. Thus far the day has gone well for France and England.

Infantry Springs From Trenches.

At 7:30 o'clock through clouds of smoke and dust which hung over the whole field as far as the eye could see, the infantrymen sprang from the trenches for an assault over a front of twenty miles. Already it has gained posession of the first line trenches and the advance is continuing.

The new British trench mortars, which fire thirty-five shots a minute, played a great part, cutting wire entanglements and destroying trenches.

Robert Bengs, residing at 2329 Weisser Park avenue, and foreman for the Engineering company, Winter street and Wabash avenue, and seven or eight other workmen, narrowly escaped death shortly after 10 o'clock Saturday morning, when the entire front of three stories of the Carnahan building, 113 West Jefferson street, gave way, crashing to the street.

Bengs was badly cut and bruised about the head, face and arms, but his injuries are not regarded as fatal. He was attended by Dr. Edward J. McOscar.

An entire new front was being put in the building and lack of sufficient supports is believed to have weakened it to such an extent that when a large cross beam was being hoisted the weight of it caused the entire front to give way. The ropes holding the beam were broken and came down to the sidewalk with a terrific crash, missing two or three of the workmen by but a few inches. Bricks and timbers fell in every direction, many of them landing in the middle of the street. Fortunately no one was passing at the time.

That none of the workmen was killed outright or buried beneath the debris is regarded as little less than miraculous. The crash came almost without a moment's warning, just as the big iron beam was about in the right position to be placed. Several of the workmen were working inside of the building, several feet from the front.

The building is owned by Weil brothers and was undergoing extensive repairs. Remodeling of the building had commenced last Monday.

Most of the workmen who were working on the sidewalk and were

Provides $2,000,000 for Dependent Families of Guardsmen.

Washington, July 1.—The Hay bill, appropriating $2,000,000 for dependent families of national guardsmen called or drafted in the present emergency, was passed by the house today. The bill, which now goes to the senate, allows not exceeding $50 a month to the dependent families in the discretion of the secretary of war.

Representatives Small, democrat, North Carlina, and James, republican, Michigan, were the only members to vote against the bill, which passed 297 to 2.

A general revenue bill, designed to produce about $210,000,000 from increased surtaxes on incomes and special taxes on inheritances and war munition plants, was introduced in the house today by Kitchen, the democratic leader.

It carries a provision creating a non-partisan tariff commission and an anti-dumping clause and proposes abolishing stamp taxes by eliminating schedules A and B, of the Underwood tariff law. The measure will be taken up in the house next Thursday under a special rule.

The house today agreed to the conference report on the fortifications appropration bill with a total of $25,748,050 cash appropriations and $13,800,000 in authorized contracts. An increase of $4,880,450 over the total as the measure originally passed the house, is largely in appropriations for ammunition reserves.

HUGHES AT WORK ON ACCEPTANCE SPEECH

Bridgehampton, N. Y., July 1.—Charles E. Hughes is working today on his speech of acceptance of the republican nomination for president. A big portfolio of notes and letters, made or received since he was nominated, furnished material for the document. Several days, at least, will be required to complete it.

While no definite date has been set for the notification ceremony there now seems likelihood of deviation from the tentative date of July 15.

CRISIS AT STANDSTILL

MUCH IMPATIENCE AT WASHINGTON

Adjournment of Congress May Force Action Over to Wednesday.

Washington, July 1.—Developments here in the Mexican crisis were at a standstill again today, while the United States government awaited impatiently Carranza's reply to the note sent last Sunday, demanding a statement of his intentions toward the American expedition in Mexico.

Messages received at the state department from Special Agent Rodgers at Mexico City, made no mention of the Mexican answer. Mr. Rodgers, so far, has been unable to forecast the action of Gen. Carranza and the only intimations reaching here have been through diplomatic and private dispatches. These have indicated that the de facto government was preparing to stand by its attitude of hostility toward United States troops across the border.

After today, if it should become necessary for him to address congress, he would wait until Wednesday, as both houses arranged to adjourn over the Fourth of July.

Increase in Recruiting.

Reports to the war department during the day continued to show satisfactory progress in the military preparedness for any eventualities on or beyond the border. Recruiting for the regular army increased more than 100 per cent. during

New York, June 1.—The national council of the National Educational association met here today, preliminary to the annual convention of the association which will begin Monday and continue throughout the week. The coucil is composed of officers of the association. Addresses will be delivered this afternoon and evening by Dr. A. BABY SISTER'S DEATH BRINGS RELEASE TO FORT WAYNE SOLDIER

Indianapolis, July 1.—Governor Ralston today ordered the release of Carl Rauch, of Fort Wayne, a member of the battery recruited at Purdue university, because of the death of the young artilleryman's baby sister.

The child died at Fort Wayne last night after eating some poison tablets which she had found while the family was moving. The father, J. D. Rauch, is president of the American Dredge company.

Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., July 1.—The start of the Indiana troops for the Mexican border is now only a quesion of a few hours, it is believed here, where the troops have been concentrated while being mustered into the federal service. Camp Ralston seems to breathe an atmosphere of hurry.

The artillery battalion men were busy today assemblying new transport wagons, just received from the quartermaster's department, while around the headquarters of the Third regiment details were busy unpacking new ordnance, including rifles, haversacks, cups and canteens.

No Definite Word.

Captain J. J. Toffey, U. S. A. chief mustering officer at the camp, has received no definite word about moving the Indiana soldiers.

"Indiana's quota is going to the border," he said today, but I cannot tell when. Preparations for moving, however, are going forward rapidly."

Fred N. Reynolds, representing Indiana in the troop transportation bureau of American Railway associations, has been ordered to collect full transportation equipment at the Fort Harrison yards. He has opened an office in the private car near the quartermaster's depot. Coaches, box cars and gondolas have already been assembled in the Brightwood yards and are waiting the call to be brought here.

FIREMAN SCHROEDER ON RETIRED LIST

After Twenty-Eight Years of Service is Granted Rest.

Ferdinand Schroeder, for twenty-three years fire captain at the central station and twenty-eight years a Fort Wayne fireman, will no longer leap from bed at the first tap of the midnight fire call. He was retired from service on a salary Saturday.

He has been a city fireman since 1888. He is 58 years old. For five years he served as "tillerman" for the big aerial truck and with steady nerves manned the wheel, which guided the rear of the long ladder wagon around sharp corners, as the horses galloped to fires.

Mr. Schroeder was the first city fire captain. He was appointed to that position the second year the central station was located in its present home. He has been off duty because of illness but a few days, since.

He was drawing $97.50 a month as captain of the department and will get $50 a month during the remainder of his life. He lives at 340 East Main street, directly across the street from the central station. He will continue to live in Fort Wayne.

Julius Biemer, fire secretary, has been appointed captain in place of Schroeder. His work and advanced salary as captain started Saturday.

Schroeder is the second fireman retired this year. Fred Demis was placed on the retirement list on April 1. Demis, who had been in the department fourteen years, was injured in an accident several years ago.

ROADS SHOW EFFICIENCY

FIRST GUARDSMEN ARRIVE AT EL PASO

San Antonio, July 1.—The movement of national guardsmen to the border is being conducted more efficiently than ever before, according to army officers at headquarters here today.

The transportation of troops has been in the entire charge of the American Railways association and roads have been chosen so that the troops not only were forwarded quickly to their stations, but also in such a manner that ordinary train schedules have not been interrupted. The traffic has been so evenly distributed among the roads that all have had a share in the business.

Headquarters here has been in touch with every unit of the national guard from the time it left its mobilization camp until it reached its destination. It has been possible to divert any organization from its original destination at any time and send it where its presence might be most necessary.

A portion of the New York guardsmen, including the Seventh regiment, passed through San Antonio last night. The First Illinoin regiment, which arrived here last night, will be followed today by the Second regiment, First battalion, which is expected at 5 p. m.

TWO TRAINS ARRIVE

First National Guardsmen Under New Call Reach El Paso.

El Paso, Texas, July 1.—Two troop trains of national guardsmen, one carrying light artillery, arrived here early today. It is believed the trains carried the Massachusetts guard, but information was not obtainable at army headquarters. These are the first national guardsmen to arrive in El Paso under President Wilson's recent call.

Twenty-five hundred sacks of corn, consigned to Mexican merchants in Juarez, were passed by United States customs officials today, after each sacks had been emptied in a search for contraband articles.

Many wagon loads of grain, flour, beans and similar foodstuffs have been transported over the international bridge since the establishment of what, in effect, is an embargo on large freight shipments. Mexican dealers explain their purchases by pointing out that practically no crops are being raised in Chihuahua and numbers of the people are on the verge of starvation. The food is intended to feed such people in Juarez and other cities, they asserted.

A rumor was current in Mexican circles in El Paso today that Francisco Villa had taken charge of the Carranza force of 15,000 men being concentrated at Bustillos, about seventy miles west of Chihuahua City, on the line of the Mexico Northwestern railway. Authorities in Juarez, however, declared the report unfounded.

During the night a heavy provost guard, a troop of cavalry and a detachment of infantry mounted on motorcycles was stationed at the plaza, while large posts were kept at the international bridges.

Although much feeling was aroused in Juarez by reports that American soldiers near Ysleta, Texas, 12 miles east, had fired across the border "without cause," killing a Mexican custom rider, Gen. Francisco Gonzales, commandant, said today, that the civil populace was well under control.

NOT AUTHORIZED TO SPEAK FOR MEXICO

Mexico City, July 1.—The war office issued a statement early today that various individuals who are now in the United States as members of so-called peace commissions have no authority or right to speak or act for the Mexican government.

Parties of Americans continue to leave for Vera Cruz in special cars. Only a few score Americans now remain in the capital.

The eating of bichloride of mercury tablets at 11 o'clock Friday morning resulted in the death of little Mary Louise, the two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Rauch at the Hope hospital at 7 o'clock, Friday evening.

As told in Friday evening's Sentinel, the family was moving from South Harrison street to Wildwood avenue and the tablets were accidentally dropped to the floor. The child thinking they were candy, ate several of them. The mother although moving had watched the baby all morning and had turned her back for just a moment. No one knew that bichloride of mercury tablets had been dropped to the floor until later.

Soon after the baby became deathly sick and was rushed to the hospital, where immediate medical attention was given to her, but all efforts to save her life were of no avail.

The little girl was a favorite of all who knew her. For a child of her age she was exceptionally bright and a most beautiful youngster. The parents are prostrate with grief. The father is the secretary of the American Steel Dredge company and surviving besides the parents are a brother, Karl D., a member of the Purdue battery, now stationed at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and a sister, Miss Kathryn. Governor Samuel M. Ralston has been appealed to in an effort to secure the release of Karl in order that he might come home to attend his little sister's funeral. It is believed that under such circumstances the request will be granted.

Washington, July 1.—With Vice President Marshall and Senators Kern and Taggart pulling for the appointment of Capt. Charles D. Herron, of the regular army as brigadier general of the Indiana brigade, Representative Cyrus Cline, of Indiana, yesterday threw a monkey wrench into the machinery by filing vigorous protests against the appointment of Capt. Herron, both with the war department and with Governor Ralston.

Representative Cline wired his protest to Governor Ralston. A constituent of Representative Cline, Col. A. H. Kuhlman, of Auburn, Ind., is the senior colonel of the Indiana national guard and cline contends he is entitled to the brigadier generaley.

"For three years," said Representative Cline, "Col. Kuhlman has been the senior colonel of the Indiana national guard. I feel that it would simply be an outrage to import a regular army officer and advance him to the post of brigadier general over Col. Kuhlman, a home man who is just as well qualified as any regular army officer. Col. Kuhlman is an expert tactician and abundantly qualified in every respect. He is a republican and I am a democrat and my only interest is in seeing that justice is done."

Representative Cline went to the war department in person yesterday afternoon to lodge his protest where it would be most effective.

Will Be Determined When Treasury Balance is Figured.

Washington, July 1.—Treasury officials were busy today figuring the treasury's net balance for the fiscal year which ended last midnight with a view to determining whether a bond issue will be necessary to care for the extraordinary expenses of the Mexican crisis.

There is an agreement among administration leaders to ask congress to authorize such a bond issue in the event the ordinary resources of the treasury and the additional $210,000,000 expected from the administration revenue bill are not sufficient.

The expenses incident to the Mexican emergency already provided for or estimated approximately $125,000,000. This as well as any further expense would be covered in the proposed bond issue.

Authority to issue bonds may not be sought from congress if the treasury surplus is large enough. This should be known today. At the close of business yesterday it was $174,171,845 and prospects were that it would be increased to more than $200,000,000.

The administration omnibus revenue bill, which will raise $210,000,000, was ready for introduction in the house today. The democratic leaders plan to begin consideration of the measure in the house next Thursday under a special rule providing for a final vote before adjournment Saturday.

A British staff officer who witnessed the advance at the junction of the French and British lines, said the attack was launched as though the men were on parade.

Simultaneously with the launching of the British offensive French infantry advanced to the attack. This movement of the French troops was inaugurated over a section of the French line adjoining the junction point with the British front.

The tremendous offensive which has been launched by the British army on the German front is the culmination of a five-day bombardment which in the amount of ammunition expended and in the territory involved exceeds anything of the kind that has been previously known in the world war.

For some weeks reports have been current in England and France that the "big push" of the British was about to commence. It was stated that England had 2,000,000 men, fully equipped and trained, in preparation for the supreme effort to break the German lines.

More than 1,000,000 shells are declared to have been fired daily in the preliminary bombardment which extended over a front ninety miles in length.

The menace of the British attack was fully appreciated in Germany, according to newspaper comments from Berlin, and the utmost confidence was expressed in the ability of the Germans to meet and crush it.

Allies on Offensive.

The allies are now on the offensive in practically every field of the war. The British assault comes on the heels of the great successes won by the Russians in Galicia and Bukowina, which have resulted in completely driving the Austrians from Bukowina and are still continuing. On the Italian front the central powers have also met with severe reverses and for several days the Italians have been steadily driving the Austrians from position after position in Trentino. The defense also of Verdun by the French appears to have stiffened and the balance of battle in that bitterly contested sector appears recently to have swayed in favor of the defenders.

New Departure in Tactics.

The great offensive undertaken by the British offers, according to reports from the front and the comments of military critics, an absolutely new departure in the tactics hitherto pursued by the belligerents.

Contrary to the favorite tactics of the Germans, the British did not attempt a partial advance by massing their artillery at a given point on the line and following an intense bombardment by an infantry attack in serried columns.

Employing an enormous number of guns the British maintained a continuous and even bombardment of the German lines along the entire ninety miles of attack. They sought to level the German trenches and destroy the concrete fortifications which sheltered the German machine gun squads.

Hurricanes of Shells.

Hurricanes of shells were also directed against the German barbed wire entanglement. In the evenings, following this daily artillery storm, raiding parties dashed out from the British lines to complete the destruction wrought by the big guns. In this way the British claim that many prisoners were taken, machine guns destroyed or captured, and the entire defense of the Germans demoralized. A French officer who witnessed this plan of operations, describes it as "the last word in scientific warfare."

The last considerable offensive undertaken by the British was a drive at Loos in September, 1915, in conjunction with a similar French effort in the Champagne district. The British captured Loos and claimed to have taken 20,000 German prisoners and many guns. They were unable to press home their advantage, however, because, according to the British war office, the reserves failed to arrive on time.

The British official losses in the battle of Loos were 60,000 men. That the British public is prepared to face roll of dead and wounded on an even vaster scale is indicated by the comments of the British newspapers in anticipation of the present offensive. Political and military leaders have warned the nation that the smashing of the German lines could not possibly be accomplished except at an appalling loss of life. It has been asserted, indeed, that the British authorities were prepared to face a loss of some hundreds of thousands of soldiers if they could achieve their object and drive the Germans from France and Belgium.

The only front in the whole theater of the world war where comparative quiet reigns today is in the Balkans, and the predictions of an allied advance in that region have been at least as numerous and circumstantial as those regarding the British army on France. There have been some minor indications of portending activity in the Balkans in the form of increasing artillery activity, aerial raids and efforts by the Bulgarians to strengthen their lines by the occupation of fortresses on the Greek side of the frontier.

Newspaper correspondents at Saloniki have estimated that the allies have a total of 600,000 to 700,000 veteran soldiers concentrated on their lines in that district. The reorganized Serbian army, reported to be 150,000 strong, was recently transported to Saloniki from the island of Corfu, where they had been re-equipped. The British are said to have brought 200,000 men from Egypt, in addition to large numbers who were sent to Greece, following the ill-fated Dardanelles expedition. The balance of the force is composed of French troops, the majority also veterans of the Dardanelles. The highest estimate placed on the Bulgarian forces, which must oppose this great army, has been between 200,000 and 300,000 men. A dispatch from the Bulgarian front stated recently that the German troops who had been operating in the Balkans had been withdrawn to other fronts and that the brunt of any attack must be borne by the Bulgarians.

The portion of the line selected by the British for the inauguration of the drive runs from the Somme northward past Albert to a point about eight miles south of Arras. It is on the section of the western front which runs roughly north and south from the North sea through Belgium and northern France, before it swings sharply to the south and east and on to the Swiss border. Albert is seventy miles northeast of Paris.

There has been muc hheavy fighting over this ground, but not to the extent that further north, where lie the battlefields of Arras, Loos, Neuve Chapelle, Ypris and Dixmude.

During the early stages of the battle at Verdun when the French were compelled to bring up large reserves to meet the German drive the British took over a long section of French trenches, and now hold about ninety miles of the western front. What remains of the Belgian army, under command of King Albert, is in the trenches from the North sea to a point near Lizorne, about six miles northeast of Ypres. The British army, under General Sir Douglas Haig holds the line from the junction with the Belgians as far as the Somme.

GERMANS GAIN AT VERDUN.

Paris, July 1.—(12 noon.)—After four violent attacks with liquid fire the Germans succeeded in capturing the positions east of Hill 304 which were taken by the French yesterday. The French made a counter attack and recaptured the position, according to an official statement issued by the war office today.

After several furious assaults the Germans succeeded in penetrating the works around Thiaumont which were captured by the French yesterday, according to the official statement.

RUSSIANS IN RETREAT.

Constantinople, July 1.—(Via London, 1:45 p. m.)—The Russian force recently driven back by the Turks from the Persian border of Mesopotamia, is effecting a further retreat in the direction of Kermanshah, Persia, under Turkish pursuit, according to a war office statement today.

REPULSED BY GERMANS.

Berlin, July 1.—(Via London, 5:20 p. m.)—Reconnoitering attacks by French and British troops along the western front during the night were in all cases repulsed by the Germans, the war office announced today.

ONE MAN HURT IN BAD CRASH

helping to hoist the beam jumped inside of the building when the crash came, otherwise they would have been killed.

Among those working on the job were the following: Herman Doenges and son, Herman L., 2945 Hanna street; George Kaiser, 1317 Hugh street; Frederick J. Kaiser, 1507 Lewis street; Martin W. Ferber, 2818 South Calhoun street; Henry Black, George Meltz, Walter Pogorrzlski and Joe Zahner. Bengs, the injured man, is a brother of Gustave Bengs, manager of the Engineering company.

Fellow workmen, at the risk of their lives, went to the rescue of Bengs, their foreman, and lost no time in lifting him from under the debris and carrying him to safety. He was later removed to the Lutheran hospital in the police ambulance, where he was given immediate medical attention.

Pagorrzlski's Version.

"It sounded like somebody blew up the building," said Walter Pagorrzlski, who was holding the big chain attached to the huge beam and was trying to guide the brace into place at the time of the collapse. He was standing inside the building on the first floor. "I was almost under the beam," he said. "I saw the sidewalk start to go down first. I believe the sidewalk caved in the first thing. There was an awful racket. I thought the whole building was coming down. I ran back into the building. The floor shook like an earthquake. I thought I was a goner. I did not see Banks fall or anything of the wreck till it was over. I kept trying to get away. When things settled down I looked back. Everything in front looked like a cyclone."

Black Talks.

Henry Black and George Meltz were inside the building on the second floor turning the wheel of the windlass which was raising the two and a half ton beam into place.

"We had the beam almost high enough," Black said. "Something broke. It sounded like everything happened at once. I saw Bengs, who was standing on the beam, drop out of sight. The floor on which we stood started to go down. We tried to run towards the back of the building. It was all over in a minute. I think the cable broke first."

For several minutes after the collapse of the front of the structure pieces of plank and brick came rattling down at intervals. Police were kept busy driving curious spectators back from the path of danger.

Bengs was reported late Saturday afternoon as getting along nicely. No bones were broken.

The Carnahan building had been leased to Kilbourne & Perry, local real estate builders, by Weil Brothers some months ago, who had sub-leased it to a furniture company moving here from South Bend. The furniture company had closed the sub-lease a couple or three weeks ago and expected to occupy the building not later than August 1.

the week ending at noon, yesterday, following an increase of more than 50 per cent. the preceding seven days. A total of 2,036 men were sworn in this week as against 1,105 last week. The preceding average weekly enlistment was in the neighborhood of 700.

During the 100 days of recruiting under the authority granted by congress to increase the regular army immediately after the Columbus raid, a total of 13,251 men have been accepted out of 59,406 applicants for enlistment. New York city led the recruiting last week, with 1,024 men accepted, against 273 the preceding week; Chicago was next, with 807 against 227, and San Francisco third, with 421 naginst 81.

The war department issued today a brief bulletin under its new censorship rules. It reported that increment of the California and Illinois national guard for the border last night and obtained excerpts from messages from Gen. Funston, giving a variety of border reports already covered in the press dispatches.

It was plain that administration officials were impatient at the failure to receive any word of when the Mexican note might be expected since the demand for a prompt reply went to Mexico City last Sunday. How much longer President Wilson would consent to wait was a subject of much speculation.

Another indication tending to support the belief that the reply will be unfavorable was the memorandum given out yesterday by the Mexican foreign office. It specifically denied all the charges contained in the American note replying to General Carranza's representations for withdrawal of troops, and laid the blame for attacks on Americans in Mexico on the carelessness of the Americans themselves. It is untrue, the memorandum stated, that the Mexican authorities have protected bandits who raided American border communities, or have made no efforts to apprehend them.

Strong assurances may be given in the Mexican reply, it is believed by officials here, of the de facto government's ability to protect the border against further raids. The Mexican embassy stated fifty thousand troops would be available for this service if the American line is withdrawn.

Asking damages for injuries received when auto driven by Charles Menefee and owned for hire as a jitney bus by Harry Menefee, was driven against him at the corner of Calhoun and Grand street, knocking him to the pavement, Fred Hilgemann Saturday filed suit in the superior court.

The driver is charged with failure to slow down or give a signal of approach of his car. Injuries sustained were to the defendant's leg and body when the auto struck him. It was necessary to call a doctor to attend the plaintiff, the complaint says, and Hilgemann was kept from his usual avocation. Harry H. Hilgemann is attorney for the plaintiff.

Suit Against Auto Company.

Divorce Is Sought.

Hazel Weick has brought suit in superior court for a divorce, alimony of $500, and custody of the child from Philip Weick. Mr. and Mrs. Weick were married May 22, 1909, and separated June 28, 1916. Cruel treatment is charged, the plaintiff alleging her husband attempted to choke her or do her bodily violence. Mrs. Weick also charges that Weick made false accusations reflecting on her morality. The defendant is alleged to have a $300 equity in realty and $200 worth of household goods. The General Electric works, of which Weick is an employe, is made a defendant in order that the defendant may not draw money due him. A restraining order is also asked to prevent Weick from molesting his wife. Ryan, Ryan & Aldrich are attorneys for the plaintiff.

Divorce Suit Filed.

Josephine Burnworth has brought suit for a divorce from Charles Burnworth asking allmony of $1,000 and the custody of a minor child. The complaint recites that Mr. and Mrs. Burnworth were married March 19, 1914, and separated June 30, 1916. Cruelty is alleged and Burnworth is charged with beating his wife with his fists. Drunkenness is also charged. Lee J. Hartzell is attorney for the plaintiff.

Women's Press club of Indiana to take charge of a fund to be known as the soldiers' comfort fund, the purpose to which the fund is to be put being to provide for the little luxuries for the members of the Indiana national guard at the front. The fund was started with a $100 contribution from the Interstate Historical Pictures corporation, which is producing the centennial picture, "Indiana," and augmented by $5 from Governor Ralston's secretary, B. B. Johnson, whose son, Lieut. Fred Bates Johnson, is a member of the guard.

The purposes for which the fund is being raised in no way conflict with the organization of business men which is working for the creation of a large sum of money to take care of the families and dependents of the men who are members of the Indiana national guard. The comfort fund will be used to provide dainties that the army rations do not include, goggles to protect the eyes against the blinding dust and dazzling sun, cooling lotions for the parched skin, candies and tobacco.

Little Privations Worst.

Men who have served at the front have often declared that it is not the great hardships which are hard to bear, but the little privations. The longing for sweets, often dormant when they were easily to be had, becomes a gnawing yearning when in the trenches or camp, it is said, and the soldiers grow restless and discontented when the tobacco supply runs low.

The governor has asked that the people of the state contribute to this fund, the amounts being sent either direct to the Women's Press club, Indianapolis, or to the governor.

Capt. Jesse T. Johnson was appointed major of infantry, subject to examination, by Governor Ralston early today. He was assigned to command the second battalion of the new First regiment of infantry, which is under the command of Col. Leslie R. Naftzger.

Maj. Howard F. Noble, of Culver, who was appointed a major several days ago by the governor, has been designated to command the second battalion of the Second regiment of infantry. Both of the men have been appointed to places to which Governor Ralston formerly had sought to appoint regular army officers, who were not available for state duty.

POSTOFFICE SHOWS GAIN.

Substantial Increase Each Month of Past Fiscal Year.

The report of the Fort Wayne postoffice for the fiscal year ending June 30 shows a substantial increase for each month of the year, although no figures are given out by order of the postoffice department. W. J. Hess, assistant postmaster, gave the statement of the business handled Saturday.

The postoffice at Poe, Ind., has been discontinued, and patrons of that office will be served mostly by rural routes out of Fort Wayne.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Marion, Ind., July 1.—J. F. Johnson, keeper of a resort, is a fugitive somewhere in the swamps of the Kankakee here. He fired on his son, J. Wesley Johnson, three times last night, just as the latter was being brought home by M. S. Campbell, a constable, in an automobile. The officer pursued the father, but finally gave up the chase and brought the son back home for safety.

J. Wesley Johnson had been arrested for an alleged attempt on the life of his nephew, Floyd Albright, of Marion. During their encounter Johnson's mother died. She has since been buried at Columbia City.

MACHINE OWNER HELD.

Muncie, Ind., July 1.—Shortly after noon yesterday Detective Miller arrested Jesse Nicely, 52, a farmer residing six miles southwest on the Middletown pike, on a charge of unlawfully operating an automobile. He was released last night on bond. His trial will be held Monday morning at 8 o'clock before Judge Gregory.

It is claimed that Nicely's machine is responsible for the death of William Barnes, a laborer, who was killed by an automobile Wednesday evening about 9:30 o'clock near the corner of Liberty and Seymour streets.

HUNTINGTON BOY WINS CROSS

Huntington, Ind., July 1—Philip Lewis, a Harvard student, who was given leave of absence to join the American ambulance corps doing duty somewhere in France, has been awarded the French (Croix de Guerre) "cross of war." This honor is only given to those who perform feats of bravery under fire. He is not a fighting man but is connected with the American Red Cross. Nevertheless his dangers are just as great as those of the soldiers because he is compelled to face the same fire and he has no arms for his defense. Lewis is a former Huntington boy, but his people now live in Indianapolis.

SOLDIER GOT COLD FEET.

Warsaw, Ind., July 1.—A warrant was issued Friday for the arrest of Ray Grossnickle, who is wanted at Warsaw. Grossnickle enlisted with the Warsaw militia company a few days ago and while war in the distance looked good to him, yet the closer it got the less he liked the prospect and when the actual call came to get into service he could not be found. He has never been located.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCY FOR FARMERS.

Logansport, Ind., July 1.—To bring many men and boys into closer touch with farm life, as well as to provide employment for those that need it, the Council of Social agencies has opened an employment agency for men and boys willing to do farm labor. The work also is being done in appreciation of the charity work done by farmers for the Logansport societies in furnishing supplies.

FARMER CHARGED WITH SHOOOTING.

COUNCILMAN CONVICTED.

Youngstown, Ind., July 1.—After being out four hours a jury in Judge Barnum's branch of common pleas court Wednesday afternoon found Hugh Boyle, East Youngstown councilman, guilty under an indictment charging him with having an unlawful interest as an officer in a public contract. The penalty is from one to ten years in the state penitentiary.

AGED RESIDENT DIES.

Goshen, Ind., July 1.—Mrs. Dianna Elizabeth Lantz, aged 87 years and for over seventy years a resident of Clinton township, died this morning at her home, eight miles southeast of Goshen, of old age and complications, after an illness of one week. The deceased was born in Pennsylvania, coming here with her parents at the time this territory was opened up. She was well known throughout Elkhart county.

GAVE COOKIES TO SOLDIERS.

Huntington, Ind., July 1.—Mrs. Florence Perdue, living on East Franklin street, proved her patriotism yesterday in a substantial manner. Whenever a troop would pull into the Erie depot her little daughter, Dessie May, would go along the cars giving the soldiers cookies from a big basket she carried on her arm. As fast as the basket would be emptied—which was very often—the little girl would fill it up again.

MONTPELIER MAN A SUICIDE

BOY'S SKULL FRACTURED

H. E. Smith, of Fort Wayne, tells this one: "Business keeps me pinned down during the week, so I naturally look to Sunday for some recreation. I have two boys, one four and the other seven, and of course when I think of a pleasant Sunday those kids must be considered.

"Recently I longed for a day's fishing trip and sugested to my wife that I slip away from the kids and have a half day to myself fighting the finny tribe. Milady does not approve of such Sunday stunts, but to my surprise she not only insisted that I go but that I take the boys with me. She knew I had been working hard and that I was in need of recreation.

"On the following Sunday three fishermen sneaked out the back gate and walked nearly two miles to an ideal hole, where we fished to our heart's delight. I caught three or four fair-sized fish, while the younger boy managed to tear his clothes while climbing through a barbed wire fence.

"Several days later I was alarmed to receive a telephone call from my wife, who told me the younger boy had been missing since early in the morning. I hurried home, the neighborhood was aroused and all joined in a fruitless search. Not a sign of that kid.

"During the search two fishermen passed the house and the thought came to my wife that possibly the boy had taken another fishing trip. I jumped in my car and drove like mad to the place we had fished on that Sunday. As I climbed down the bank and through the barbed wire fence I caught a glimpse of white, and as I emerged from a thicket there sat that kid 'fishing' with a pole but no line.

"It was too good for me to punish him, although his clothes were a sight. His trousers and waist were torn and his face and hands just as dirty as possible. He grinned as he saw me and invited me to fish with him. Of course I sat down on the bank with him and then asked him what on earth had happened to his clothes.

ESCAPE WITH SLIGHT BRUISES.

When an interurban car at a crossing on the Indianapolis road, seven miles south of the city, struck an auto in which M. J. Stock, 1017 Wildwood avenue, and J. Herman Beuter, ex-county treasurer, were riding Friday afternoon, the rear wheels and back end of the car were damaged, but neither of the occupants were seriously hurt. Mr. Beuter jumped from the car and both received slight bruises. The interurban did not hit the auto squarely and for that reason danger of injury to either of the men was lessened.

The car was the property of Mr. Stock, and it was badly wrecked.

Psalm 119:33-48.

33. Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end.
34. Give me understanding, and I shall keep they law; yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart.
35. Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.
36. Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness.
37. Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way.
38. Stablish thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.
39. Turn away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good.
40. Behold, I have longed after thy precepts: quicken me in thy righteousness.
41. Let thy mercies come also unto me, O Lord, even thy salvation, according to thy word.
42. So shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me: for I trust in thy word.
43. And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth; for I have hoped in thy judgments.
44. So shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.
45. And I will walk at liberty; for I seek thy precepts.
46. I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.
47. And I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.
48. My hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes.

Sixteen automobiles have just been placed in service for the rural mail system out of Indianpolis, taking the place of twice as many horse-drawn wagons which have been used since the establishment of the rural mail delivery system some years ago. The experiment will be watched with interest because of protests that have been made at some other points at which the motor-driven mail wagons were placed in service on the rural routes.

In theory, at least, the automobile has all the best of it for the rapid transportation of mail between the postoffice and the rural patron. There would appear to be no reason in the world why the service cannot thus be made more expeditious, more satisfactory and every bit as dependable as under the old plan. It may be argued that the highways about the smaller cities and towns are not yet improved to a degree that would warrant the universal use of the automobile on the rural route, and yet the automobile is today going about everywhere that the horse-drawn vehicle can go. Steady improvement of the highway system in Indiana, too, is removing the last possible objection to the newer idea. The rural free delivery of mail is in no sense a profit-making concern. It is a public service maintained at heavy cost, because it is believed to be worth it, and it has come to stay. That being true, it ought to be made as efficient as possible, and the automobile looks very much like the means to that end.

Pretty much everybody is now indulging in the popular pastime of declaring that the unpreparedness of the United States in a military way is little short of criminal, and that it is unthinkable that a great country should permit itself to be caught in so helpless a predicament. At the same time there is the most cheerful unanimity of agreement that the other fellow is wholly to blame. It is never easy to admit individual responsibility in any situation which must be regarded as the logical outcome of the state of citizenship and the public mind as a whole. We can improve conditions immensely when we begin to realize that we are chargable for what happens or for what fails to happen just in proportion to the exertion we have put forth in meeting the full requirement of citizenship—in sharing its burdens and in solving its problems as well as enjoying its benefits. Public policy is to no small degree a personal matter, after all.

Congressman Cline is exerting his efforts with the war department to secure the appointment of Col. A. L. Kuhlman, of Auburn, as brigadier general of the new Indiana brigade in preference to the selection of a regular army officer for that position. Mr. Cline argues that for three years Colonel Kuhlman has been the senior colonel of the Indiana national guard, and he has given long years of continuous service to the militia in one capacity or another. Whether Mr. Cline shall prove successful in his efforts or not, his action is a deserved recognition of the Auburn man that will win cordial approval in this section of the state.

On rare occasions General Carranza displays something that seems remarkably like sound discretion and good sense. He has released the colored American troopers which his men captured in the ambush at Carrizal, compiying rather more promptly than is his wont with the demands made by the United States. The bigger issue, however, that of his future attitude regarding the right of the United States to protect itself and its citizens by any means that it may be forced to use, is still hanging in the balance. And as an element with which to dicker, we strongly suspect that will prove to be a short-lived resource with the de facto president.

The Indiana state republican organization has sent to Colonel Roosevelt a touching telegram of thankful appreciation of his action in coming over to the support of Mr. Hughes. Doubtless before investing in loving cups or other testimonials more expensive than a telegram, the Indiana republicans held it to be the part of financial discretion to wait until the votes are counted in November.

The recent appointment of a lieutenant of police at Indianapolis has been followed by a shock of pained surprise, and then by the cry that the new appointee has never been an avowed politician. Can it be that Indianapolis is beginning to make official selections on the basis of merit and fitness for the job rather than on that of political pull?

Figures given out from the office of the city building inspector show that building construction in Fort Wayne for the first six months of 1916, aggregates more than one and one-half millions of dollars, and is $700,000 in excess of the total for the same period last year. Fort Wayne is marching splendidly on and simply will not halt.

"Then He Hit Me There!"

MOBILIZATION IS WORTH WHILE.

(Indianapolis Star.)

The mobilization of the National Guard will be worth all it costs in time, effort and money even if Mexican developments should make it unnecessary for the guardsmen to fire a single shot. We have recently amended our laws so as to make the state troops a part of the reserve forces of the regular army. It is important that those reserves should have actual experience in responding to an emergency. They are getting that practice now and it will be valuable.

One of the strongest arguments put forth by those who opposed the law to federalize the National Guard, instead of providing for a larger regular army with a national reserve, was that the state troops are units without co-ordination. A general mobilization, such as is in progress, serves to bring out the difficulties that are in the way of getting the forces of the states together. Problems are being solved and proficiency attained that mean much for all time.

It might be worth while to have general mobilization at intervals even when no foreign trouble is threatened. Details may be mapped out on paper and learned in theory, but nothing counts like actual practice. If the National Guard is to be the army's reserve force, in emergencies, it is entitled to know just what and how it is supposed to do. That can be learned most effectively from such movements as the one called into being by the Mexican complication.

Unnatural History, by Eugene Ahern.

THE PARROT.

Barbers are the A-No. 1 reporters. Talk about "scoops," why, they can pick up more news of any kind in five minutes without leaving the shop than four and twenty newspapermen could find in a month.

In the olden times, which was a long time ago, when Bryan first ran for president, besides being barbers they were surgeons. Haven't you noticed after you get a shave that there was something about your face that made you think they would make good surgeons? We have a little memento on the port side of our nose that will remind us of the fact for life.

If you spent an hour shampooing the moss on your "derby chair" and then went into the parrot's shop he'd say "Would you like a shampoo? I see your hair is very oily and dusty"—just like that.

Statement Seeks to Make Attitude of Employes Clear to Public.

Cleveland, O., July 1.—In an effort to make their position clear to the public, the transportation brotherhoods have issued the following statement relative to the conference between the employes' committee and the railway managers, recently held in New York city.

The employes' committee met the railway managers' committee and presented their demands for an eight-hour workday with a penalty for overtime of time and a half pay.

The managers' committee refused to grant these demands and did not submit any definite counter-proposition to the employes.

The managers did discuss what they termed a "tentative proposal," which did not take into consideration the plain fact that freight train crews are piece workers and they are paid to perform a certain definite service of moving a train from one end of a division to the other and when they have performed this piece work they have done what they were paid to do regardless of whether it was done in less than eight hours.

What the men want is a chance to perform this piece work in all cases in eight hours or less.

Having no penalty for the use of overtime, the railroad companies now use the men continuously from twelve to twenty hours.

The interstate commerce commission has no authority under the law to regulate wages of employes any more than it has to regulate the price of steel rails and other supplies purchased by the railroad companies. Therefore, any investigation made by the interstate commerce commission into the subject of wages would come to naught, for the reason that the commission has no power to settle the matter.

Under the Newlands arbitration law, it is distinctly provided that arbitration can be set in operation "when a strike is threatened."

No man has a right to say that a "strike is threatened" until the result of the strike vote, now being taken, is ascertained. The will of the employes must be known before a strike can be threatened.

If the interstate commerce commission would assume the responsibility of agreeing that the demands of the men should be met, it would clearly be up to the commission to provide the means for meeting any increased cost of operation.

The railways, of course, would like to put the interstate commerce commission under this obligation to grant increased freight rates.

If it is right and proper for the freight train employes to go into an arbitration as to whether they shall be worked excessive hours and as to what they shall sell their labor for, then it would only be consistent for the railway car and engine buildings and railway supply dealers to agree to arbitrate with the railroads as to the price the railroads should pay for these things.

The principal objection, however, of the employes to arbitration would be on the ground of the inability to secure impartial arbitrators who were sufficiently acquainted with the technicalities of a problem of this kind.

In a previous arbitration between the employes and the companies, the man who was acting as neutral arbitrator was a corporation lawyer representing large vested interests, owners of railroad securities and who had appeared in numerous cases as attorney of record for the Standard Oil company.

Three of the persons were killed in Marion county. Two of them were boys. The other two dead live at Rushville and near Fowler. Lightning caused the death of three. The dead are:

Lightning set fire to the grain elevator of the Indianapolis Elevator company, but the loss was small. A heavy wind accompanied the storm and did considerable damage to crops. A number of buildings in Rushville and Columbus were struck by lightning.

Young Bray was electrocuted when he grasped a telephone wire which had broken and fallen across a trolley wire during the storm. Kelly was attempting to drive a horse into a barn at his home when struck. His body was found after the storm by a younger brother. Brummitt was driving a wagon load of stone. He and his team were killed. The wagon was destroyed and the stone scattered. The lightning tore a large hole in the ground at the spot.

Mrs. Kelso saw the lightning strike the residence of James Hendricks across the street from her home. She ran out of her house screaming and dropped dead in the street. The Hendricks dwelling was destroyed.

Hacker was working in the Reeves Pulley works at Columbus when it was struck. None of the other workmen were injured. His condition is serious.

WILSON CAN DO LITTLE.

Pleas for Clemency for Casement Still Pouring In.

Washington, July 1.—Petitions requesting that President Wilson urge the British government to grant clemency to Sir Roger Casement, the Irish revolutionist, poured into the white house today from many parts of the country. It is generally understood that the United States can do no more than bring such petitions to the attention of Great Britain in an informal and unofficial manner.

New York, July 1.—President Wilson made it plain in his speech at the New York Press club banquet last night that he will not countenance a war with Mexico until there is no other alternative for settling the border troubles.

Again he declared that he was ready to sacrifice his own political fortunes in order to carry out his convictions as to what would be the course to pursue in the situation.

The president's audience, composed of newspaper men, state and political leaders and others prominent in public life, signified their endorsement of his position by repeated outbursts of applause. When he asked if the glory of America would be enhanced by a war of conquest in Mexico, shouts of "No" came from all parts of the banquet hall. A similar response was made to his query whether it is America's duty to "carry self-defense to the point of dictation into the affairs of another people."

The president dwelt also in his efforts to serve the whole people, thousands of whom, he said, are appealing to him to maintain peace as long as possible.

"I have constantly to remind myself," he said, "that I am not the servant of those who wish to enhance the value of their Mexican investments, but that I am the servant of the rank and file of the people of the United States."

POLICE ARE PROBING EXPLOSION ON TRAIN

Oakland, Cal., July 1.—Police today began the investigation of an explosion in the smoking car of a westbound Southern Pacific train near here last night, which blew a big hole in the steel roof and caused injuries to eight persons.

W. H. Brooks, conductor of the train, reported to the police that three Mexicans boarded the train at Elmira, Cal., with tickets for Richmond, a town near this city. Two of them, he said, left the train at Richmond. Shortly before reaching the station here he found the third one in the wash room.

This third Mexican, the conductor said, left the train as soon as it stopped, and the explosion came a few minutes later. Police Inspector Charles McCarthy, of the Oakland police department, said that in his opinion the explosive was gun powder.

Washington, July 1.—A new division in the postoffice department, to be known as the division of postoffice service, with entire supervision over the handling and movement of the mails in every city and town in the United States, was created today. The change was provided by a recent act of congress.

The new division absorbs the divisions of city delivery, and salaries and allowances and that part of the division of miscellaneous transportations relating to the mail messenger, pneumatic tube and screen wagon service. The change is expected to result in improved mail service as well as in the elimination of confusion which had resulted from the division of executive authority over related postal functions.

The new division is in charge of Goodwin D. Ellsworth, of North Carolina, assisted by William S. Ryan, of New York, former heads of divisions abolished. They will have under them more than 100,000 employes scattered throughout the country, and will supervise the disbursement of more than $150,000,000 annually.

At a meeting held Friday night at the Commercial club, looking to the work of making the St. Joe river more beautiful and called by William Breuer, fifty farmers were in attendance. They reside along the river north of the city, and among their number was George Jaap, who spoke in favor of a dam for the river.

Farmers Were Present.

People of Clarksville are at the present time planning a dam, Mr. Jaap asserted, that would converge the river, Hamilton lake and other bodies of water in order that 12 miles from the St. Joe to the Maumee would be under water. Mr. Jaap declared the farmers should dam the river before some one else beat the into it. Many of the farmers, who attended the meeting, expressed enthusiasm and pledged co-operation in the belief that the damming of the river would be not only a mark of beautification but an asset to them. Mr. Breuer said the river could be made one of the most beautiful, and that the proposed action regarding the dam would bring about adequate boating, bathing or skating facilities.

Meeting Friday Night

Another meeting will be held Friday night at Germania park, at which John Bleke will act as chairman. All farmers interested in the project or living near the river will be in attendance at this meeting, it is predicted. Mr. Breuer will at this time present his plans more fully to the farmers. Committees from the Commercial, Rotary and the Real Estate exchanges are working with Br. Breuer. A total of $40,000 would be expended in damming the river and making improvements in the way of boat houses, beautiful banks and pavilions. Following the next meeting Mr. Breuer will set his committees to work toward the actual construction of the dam.

EXPRESS THANKS TO THE COLONEL

Indiana Republicans Send Roosevelt Telegram of Appreciation.

Indianapolis, July 1.—Republican state and county committeemen, together with state and congressional candidates, who gathered in Indianapolis yesterday to discuss plans for the 1916 campaign, joined unanimously in a resolution thanking Theodore Roosevelt for his "patriotic action in supporting the republican ticket."

A telegram embodying the spirit of the resolution was sent to Col. Roosevelt. It is as follows:

"Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, Oyster Bay, N. Y. At a meeting here this afternoon attended by ninety of the ninety-two republican county chairmen of Indiana, together with the entire republican state committee and all of the state and congressional candidates, a resolution was unanimously passed thanking you for the patriotic position you have taken in supporting the republican ticket, and expressing their confidence in you and appreciation of the action. I take especial personal pleasure in following the direction of the meeting and advising you of this action.

"Will H. Hays, chairman, Indiana republican state committee."

The restoration of Col. Roosevelt's picture in the state committee rooms, alongside of those of Benjamin Harrison, McKinley, Taft, Fairbanks and other republican presidents and party leaders, brought forth beaming smiles of satisfaction from out-state party men, according to Secretary L. W. Henley.

Society

The benefit bridge for the Relief Union, held this afternoon in the Anthony hotel, was as brilliant a social event as has taken place in recent weeks. The ballroom where the tables were laid for bridge, was decorated in a Japanese garden effect, with lattices of pink and white flowers. Many large baskets with tall handles were filled with roses, lilies and other garden flowers of the season, and they made fragrant and beautiful spots of color everywhere. The handles of all the baskets and everything else possible to use in a decorative way, were entwined with rambler roses and vines. Japanese lanterns hung on either side of the space built to accommodate musicians who play for dancing and outside the entrance to the ballroom very large standing baskets were filled with tall white garden flowers. Many compliments were passed on to the decorating committee who worked long and hard to obtain the charming result. The flowers were all donated. On one side of the room were prizes for winners in the game and many corsage-bouquets were ready to be presented to all who took part in a program of beautiful music and the interpretative and artistic dancing by Miss Olds between games. The musical program was given by Miss Kay Spencer, Miss Lucile Vail, Miss Irene Miller, Miss Emil Verweire, Mrs. C. A. Horton and Miss Marguerite Neff. Four hundred tickets were sold for the party and there was a large attendance of players and also of people who displayed interest by calling late in the afternoon. A refreshing punch was the only thing served. Mrs. Mary Keel, Mrs. E. H. McDonald, Mrs. J. N. Study, Mrs. Edward O'Rourke and Mrs. Isaac d'Isay were the receiving committee. There was much generosity manifested on every side by people who desired to help this project along and merchants and florists donated of their goods and ladies of their time in an unstinted manner. Prize winners were allowed to take their own choice of the six gifts, which were also donations, in order of their scores, so that there was a feeling of fairness and informality as well, that contributed to the prevailing good spirit of the benefit. Socially the party was a genuine delight.

CAMP RALSTON WILL BE A MECCA SUNDAY

Indianapolis, July 1.—Thousands of citizens from many parts of the state are expected to visit Camp Ralston at Fort Benjamin Harrison tomorrow, and, in anticipation of their coming, preparations were begun at the camp yesterday to handle a record crowd for an Indiana military camp. Excursions are to be run from a few of the towns represented by companies in the camp.

Col. A. L. Kuhlman, commander of the camp, yesterday ordered a guard of 150 men to be retailed to assist in keeping the roads open for traffic and to have charge of information stations for the benefit of relatives and friends seeking to find a particular soldier. Capt. Carl F. Beyer, commander of Company H, third regiment, will be in charge of the guard.

Will Direct Parking.

The guardsmen will direct the parking of automobiles and other vehicles and in other ways seek to keep traffic open. An even larger crowd than was present last Sunday, when the visitors were estimated at 10,000, is expected, but it is believed that with an active guard the crush experienced on the roads last Sunday will be avoided.

There will be little change tomorrow in the daily program except that time will be allowed for the soldiers to visit their friends. Visitors last Sunday experienced much difficulty in finding their friends in the big camp, but it is believed that the establishment of an information bureau will be an aid to them tomorrow.

Private Develops Typhoid.

Private Albert Zentz, 20 years old, Company F (South Bend), Third regiment, developed a case of typhoid fever yesterday and was removed from the field hospital, Camp Ralston, to the City Hospital, Indianapolis. He was feeling bad when he reached the camp a week ago, but did not go to the field hospital until three days ago. He received the anti-typhoid vaccination last Monday along with his comrades, but too late to avoid the attack of fever then coming on him. Relatives of Zentz at South Bend, were notified of his illness.

Testaments Are Distributed.

All the members of the three Indianapolis infantry companies and the Indianapolis battery are now mustered in the United States army. Company C, First regiment, commanded by Capt. Shirley, received the oath yesterday morning. The mustering in of the artillery battalion was completed yesterday when the oath was administered to battery C, of Lafayette, commanded by Capt. Brockenbrough.

The finest literature that reaches Camp Ralston is represented in the letters which come to the soldiers from their home towns. There isn't a line in the most popular newspaper or magazine which measures up to a sentence found in the hundreds—the thousands—of letters which are pouring into the camp from mothers, fathers, wives and sweethearts.

Postmaster Springsteen, of Indianapolis, went to the rescue of the camp postmaster yesterday when he agreed to provide a horse and wagon to haul mail pouches between Fort Benjamin Harrison and the camp. About fifteen big bags of mail are being received in camp each day. Persons writing to the soldiers should be sure to designate the company and the regiment to which the addressee belongs to make sure of prompt delivery.

Col. Kuhlman, commanding officer of Camp Ralston, received a letter in camp yesterday from Governor Ralston in which he expressed his appreciation of the honor done him in naming the camp for him.

Governor Appreciates Honor.

"While I am aware that the naming of the Indiana soldiers' camps in honor of the incumbent governor in time of active service has been the uniform custom, yet it was but a custom and carried with it no legal or moral obligation," wrote the governor. "I therefore appreciate the courtesy as something more than an empty honor. I prize it as not only a gracious personal compliment, but also as a mark of respect to the executive office, and as indicating something of the feeling of loyalty to the country and to those having serious responsibility in these troublous times; and so, I thank you for yourself and for the people of Indiana, whom you honor by your service and your sacrifice."

Lieut. Coy. George W. Freyermuth, Third regiment, whose home is at South Bend, was much pleased yesterday with a letter he received telling of the action of the Rotary club, of South Bend, in raising a fund to be given to company F, Third regiment, composed of South Bend men.

"This fund, which already has reached more than $500, no doubt will remind our boys that we at home are thinking of their patriotism and will do our part toward making their life as comfortable as possible," wrote E. T. Bonds, secretary of the South Bend club.

THE all-white frock has come to be an essential addition to the wardrobe While it may not be any cooler than the colored frock, it has the appearance of being so, and that helps a great deal in hot weather.

The charm of this frock lies in its simplicity. It is made of white crepe de chine and trimmed with ruffles of white taffeta, each one neatly hemstitched The first ruffle is cleverly applied to give the effect of a peplum—a note which is paramount just at present. A sash of taffeta weighted with white crocheted balls, gives the frock the appearance of a coat dress. White pearl buttons down either side of the silk vest are the sole trimming of the blouse. A white Georgette crepe collar starts out in front to be very narrow, but as it wends its way down the back it broadens considerably and doesn't stop short until it reaches the waist line.

SURPLICE TOP TO A CHEMISE

A CHEMISE that may be developed from either a fine cotton material or from one of the many lingerie silks can have a very low surplice top as in the drawing shown today. The girl who makes her own lingerie will appreciate this diversion from the regular type of chemise. This may have the ribbon run thru the eyelets, as pictured, or the ribbon and eyelets may be omitted, making the chemise a straight affair, to be gathered in by the petticoat. A fine nainsook would make a charming and cool chemise from this design. The chief charm lies in the way the dotted embroidery has been managed.

which many separate drawers or combinations are finished. This may be either a straight chemise, or it may be provided with an envelope flap to do double duty. The ruffling is batiste with a solid embroidered dot. Indeed, one could procure an edging like this with a dot of color and then make the chemise from a batiste to match the color of the dot. This ruffle can be hemstitched on to give a better finish and to save time and trouble. The top is made surplice simply by cutting the neck in a deep V, and making one side of the shaped embroidery piece extend into the chemise to simulate the surplice crossing. Hemstitching again here will give a pretty finish. Tucks hold the fullness in at the waist line, if the ribbon and eyelets are to be used.

A practical feature about this chemise is that because of its excellent fit at the neck, and because of the deepness of the V, it needs no beading or ribbon runners to hold it in place, and every girl knows what a saving this is.

DIMITY SPREADS

EVERY effort is made nowadays to make one's bedroom appear as cool as possible during the heat of summer. One of the latest means for carrying out this motive is a dimity spread. It is not only light in weight, thereby being easier to handle, but it is made up in pretty striped effects. One can select a stripe to match the color used in one's room. The background of all of the spreads of this type is white.

SOME INDISPENSABLE KITCHEN UTENSILS

THE handiest way and the quickest is what we are all looking for these days. If in your kitchen you have not an egg separator, by all means get one. They are about the shape of a coffee strainer, and when the egg is broken the yolk stays in the center and the white of the egg slips thru to any receptacle you may have ready. Then there is an apple corer which is divided in eight different parts. When the apple is pared press the corer over the top and the core is removed and the apple separated. Measuring spoons are always useful. They start with a quarter of a teaspoon size and run on up to a tablespoon. These are all fastened together, which makes them very handy.

THE STAY-AT-HOME PORCH

THE latter part of July and the whole of August usually saw the Jones family away—after a fashion. They usually went to a farm, where they took two rooms—a small, rather stuffy one to which Mr. Jones could rush when he arrived amid the rural peace at 6.5[illegible] and make a frenzied toilet for dinner served promptly at 7. The other room was usually a little larger, and in it three cots were crowded to hold Marie and Helen and Patty. The Joneses didn't like the idea of washing in well water out of basins and a lot of other things about the various farms they visited annually, but they had come almost philosophically to accept it all as a part of the penalty of "being away." The plans had all been laid for another summer of this sort, when the doctor announced that Mr. Jones shouldn't and mustn't run for trains thru the hot summer and swelter thru a two-hour train ride daily.

"He'll be all right if he gets home at half-past 4 or 5, has a comfortable place to rest and is kept cheerful," said the doctor. "If not he'll go to smash—nervous prostration."

So the trunks were carried back upstairs, and Mrs. Jones set out to make the porch, which faced a tiny lawn and then the street, "a comfortable place to rest," realizing the value of open air.

From the living room, seldom used during the hot months, she brought low wicker chairs and rockers, as well as a wicker couch. The dull blue of the country sky furnished the inspiration for the cushions and runners for the chairs; the lush green of the meadows was a cool note represented by the wash rug that covered the floor. Bits of graceful yellow pottery lent color and cheerfulness to the magazine table and cool blue-striped awnings shut out rushing, perspiring humanity. A dicky bird in a white-enameled cage with blue trimmings incessantly proclaimed that he was glad to sing for his living.

Here on hot summer afternoons the tinkle of iced drinks mingled with the smoke of Jones' good cigars, for he suddenly found that he could get home as early as 4 o'clock if he made the effort. And he quickly found that he wanted to.

To Clean Satin

Is there any way that I could clean satin that is very soiled? I would like to do it myself, as I do not want to go to the expense of having it cleaned. Mrs. L. M.

Pour 1½ teaspoonfuls of kerosene into three quarts of soapsuds, and let the satin soak in it one or two hours. Then dip it up and down repeatedly in clean warm water that has been made soapy and then rinse well by moving it up and down in clear warm water. Press it when it is nearly dry.

Every detail of the many interesting events—from the very beginning to the end—from the song service on Sunday, at the pageant grounds, properly dedicating the stage for what was to come; the enormous and enthusiastic gathering of twenty thousand people, out to see what it all looked like, and to hear the chorus of one thousand voices. Following in regular order every event of importance on the week's program, the floral parade, showing all those beautifully decorated automobiles, the equal of anything of its kind ever shown anywhere; the fraternal parade, showing all the various Fort Wayne organizations out in their best regalia, the fine representation of Moose headed by the famous Mooseheart band, the Elks, the Catholic societies, etc.

Here's Your Chance.

The interesting entertainment given by the society ladies of Fort Wayne, dressed in their ancestors' gowns, showing dresses hundreds of years old, styles of all periods of the last two hundred years. An event interesting and instructive to everybody, and which few had the good fortune to see.

And the Pageant.

A Scene Long to Be Remembered by All Those Who See It.

Three more performances and the New Palace will close for the season, to open August 20, when the regular 1916-1917 vaudeville season will start. The Lasalle Musical Comedy company will finish its four weeks' engagement in "My Cinderella Girl," the happy little college farce built on one of George Fitch's famous Siwash stories, in which the college hero does all the athletic tricks, such as winning ball games in the ninth inning and kidding the faculty, father and freshies without fear or favor. It is a merry bunch of nonsense, with plenty of dancing numbers for the nimble-footed chorus and with some eccentricities, among them being a fool dance in which dainty Grace Edler dodges Al Wilson's feet as much as possible. Guy Voyer and Harrie Lee have particularly gay roles in this comedy, roles that serve them as outlets for their merry spirits.

It was intended closing the engagement with one day of the farce comedy, Lovers and Lunatics, but this plan had to be abandoned because of the serious illness of Miss Minnie Pillard, who has the principal feminine comedy role in this diversion. Miss Pillard submitted to an operation at the Hope hospital yesterday and will be confined to the institution for a week or more, rejoining the company at Indianapolis.

Charles Wenzel, laborer, 2306 Fairfield avenue, wanted to die Friday night because his sweetheart in Michigan had gone back on him, he said. He wandered along West Berry street, looking for something to kill himself with. He muttered to himself and wept aloud at thoughts of his unrequited love. People on the street watched him for several minutes. Somebody called the police.

To the officer who accosted him Wenzel handed a note. "Give this to her for me," he said, and tears coursed down his cheeks.

"To my girl in Michigan," and Wenzel moaned and pulled his hair.

Wenzel and the note were taken to the station. The note read, "When you get this I will be gone."

Wenzel says he has lived in Fort Wayne three years. He said in municipal court Saturday that he had been drinking the day before. He does not want to die anymore, he told Judge Kerr. His trial is set for July 4, and he is held under $200 bond.

Two Held to Circuit Court.

Burt Ward and Melvin Hoehlen, both charged with assaulting small girls, were bound over to the circuit court. Ward, who is said to have been an inmate of an asylum for several years, confessed in court to having assaulted a seven-year-old girl. He was bound over to higher court and his bond fixed at $2,000.

Hoehlen is charged with attacking a fourteen-year-old girl several days ago. The girl was badly bruised in her struggles with the man, the testimony revealed. Hoehlen was held to the circuit court under $1,000 bond.

Ed Worden Sentenced.

Ed Worden, 25, laborer, who was arrested on his birthday, last Tuesday, when he was found trying to persuade a thirteen-year-old girl to go with him to Robison park, was fined $50 and costs and sentenced to 30 days at the state farm for attempting to influence a girl of tender years.

Other Police Court.

Pat Burns, who had said he wanted to be arrested when told to be quiet in a Main street saloon Friday evening, was given another chance. He came near a costly mistake when he mechanically nodded his year "Yes" in answer to Judge Kerr's question, "Do you think policemen are jokes?"

Matthew Degan and Edward Morris, colored, were fined $5 and costs for begging on the streets. Joseph Seiney, charged with intoxication, was released.

Jack Underwood, 224 East Main street, arrested several days ago on a charge of speeding on his motorcycle through a school zone, was released after a severe lecture. Underwood, who is fourteen years old and a newsboy, was turned out because he is virtually the only support of his mother.

Joseph Tarocwicz, charged with assaulting Officer Buuck two weeks ago when Buuck is said to have found Tarocwicz in the act of entering a building over the rear roof, was sentenced to ninety days at the state farm and fined $25 and costs. In the conflict between Buuck and Tarocwicz the officer shot and wounded his assailant.

John Slattery, 30, convicted on a drunk charge, will be held in jail until after the Fourth of July. "I am afraid you might not be strong enough to resist the tempation of the great holiday," Kerr told him. He is held under $25 bond.

Case of Frank Fordham, charged with child neglect, was continued until July 15. The case of William Ford, charged with wife desertion, was dismissed on request of the wife who begged another chance for the husband. Charles Banks and George Reese, charged with loitering, will be tried on July 3. Bond was fixed at $100.

Edward Burns and Amos Marks, accused of taking an active part in violence committed in connection with the Western Gas company strike, will be tried July 3. They are held under peace bond.

NEW AGENT HERE.

T. C. Cravens, of Bloomfield, Ind., who will be assigned to some county in Indiana as an agricultural agent, was sent here Saturday by the agricultural extension department of Purdue university, to receive two weeks instructions under Clarence Henry, agricultural agent of Allen county. Inasmuch as Mr. Henry leaves Sunday for a two weeks' vacation, Mr. Cravens returned to Lafayette Saturday afternoon.

Mme. Zora and Snyder the Tusker.

Mme. Zora, the greatest of all elephant trainers, and her special pet, Snyder the Tusker, a beast of unusual intelligence, will be an attraction at the Sells-Floto circus when it comes to Fort Wayne, July 13. Mme. Zora has a strange power over her huge pets and they seem to understand her very language.

The combined Sells-Floto and Buffalo Bill Wild West show this year surpasses any other attempt ever made by showmen.

Critics of the big-top attractions have called it "the champion show of the world." It has performers from every civilized country on earth, with sensational acts and features entirely new even to the resourceful minds of showmen.

Forty-two double length cars are required to transport the big equipment of the Sells-Floto show from place to place. This year the circus will carry 1,000 persons and horses without number. There are three herds of elephants and many new species of animals have been added to the zoo, which is the best in the country.

There will be a great street parade the morning of show day.

We think of railroads, telephones, the telegraph, the wireless—but how about want ads?

They are in the same class. It used to be when a man wanted help he had to ask among his friends where he could get a good stenographer, bookkeeper, etc. TODAY he puts in a want ad and tomorrow he has only to choose from a dozen or more.

He has furniture to sell—a want ad brings many buyers.

He has a house to rent—a want ad rents it—he has a house to sell—a want ad sells it.

KENDALLVILLE REDS HERE ON THE FOURTH

Two Games Scheduled at League Park Tuesday Afternoon.

The Kendallville Reds will cross bats with Mart Cleary's team at League park at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the Fourth. Big Murray will do mound duty for the Reds. He is touted as the Walter Johnson of semi-professional ball.

As a preliminary to the big game the Badger Juniors and the South Side Eagles will play, the game starting at 1 o'clock. These are two of the fastest 15-year-old teams in the city, and the game will not only interest the big crowd of youngsters, who will be admitted free, but will take many of the old fans back to the days of real sport. The kid teams are hot rivals and a real battle will be staged.

The management of the Fort Wayne team has designated the Fourth as boys' day and all of them under 16 years of age will be admitted without charge.

PLANS REGIMENT OF ATHLETE SOLDIERS

St. Louis, July 1.—Thomas G. Watts, of St. Louis, head of the Western Association of the Amateur Athletic union, suggests the formation of an A. A. U. regiment to fight the Mexicans. He would enroll athletes and officials of the A. A. U. and send the entire regiment into camp as soon as possible to be among the first to answer the call to duty.

Watts' general idea is mighty fine.

He asks for three companies from New York, two from New England, one middle Atlantic, two central and one or two from the Pacific coast.

"I feel confident every athlete in the United States would respond at once," said Watts. "Athletes in the middle west are enthusiastic about their chances fighting the Mexicans. Let the boys enlist and you can rest assured the A. A. U. will cut a big swathe on the firing line."

A universal uniform consisting of a cream colored shirt of thin material, light flannel trousers and white tennis shoes sufficed for the men players gathered from all quarters of the United States, but milady refused to forsake fashion's dictates. Some even clung to fashionable hats.

Miss Florence Rudolph was attired in a green and white striped hat with wide drooping brim, white skirt and silk shirtwaist, white shoes and stockings. Miss Bjurstedt mowed down all rivals while wearing a plain dark colored sleeveless vest that she had knitted herself while waiting for her turn on the courts. Her skirt and waist are of the plainest kind.

As in the tournaments in which she has competed Miss Bjurstedt carried too many guns for her opponents, her closest matches being with Miss Florence Ballin, of New York, and Miss Guthrie.

Among the chief surprises in the men's competition was the playing of C. B. Doyle, of Washington, who defeated George M. Church, and the work of Willis E. Davis, of California.

Mart Cleary's Fort Wayne players are taking Sunday's game seriously. While they are confident of winning—they are always confident, for that matter—they appreciate that they are up against one of the fastest baseball teams in northern Indiana.

Although the locals started bad, they are now going great. The weak places have been strengthened and they now look upon themselves as the best independent aggregation in the state.

The Auburn team is coming with a strong line-up, headed by Walter Scott, a pitcher who tried out with the Boston Americans. The team is said to be strong in all departments. The game will be the first of a series of three to be staged. Ladies will be admitted free.

Cleveland, O., July 1.—The east triumphed over the west when George M. Church, of Tenafly, N. J., and Dean Mathey, of Cranford, N. J., former Princeton team, retained the clay courts doubles championship of the United States by defeating Willis E. Davis and Harold Vandyke Johns, of San Francisco, 7—5, 6—0, 6—2, in the challenge round of doubles.

The champions more than lived up to their reputations. Church, in particular, played spectacular tennis. His exhibition at the net bordered on the sensational. Mathey played well considering he has not been on the courts as much as Church this season. The Californians performed cleverly in the first set, but from then on were erratic.

Doyle vs. McEllroy for Title.

Conrad B. Doyle, of the Columbia Country club of Washington, D. C., reached the final round in men's singles by defeating William McEllroy, of Pittsburg, 6—3, 6—3, 7—5.

Doyle's opponent in the final round will be Willis E. Davis. This match, which will be played tomorrow, will be for the national singles championship, as R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia, 1915 champion, will not defend his title.

Tennis Fans Cheer Soldiers.

The championship doubles match was interrupted three times when troop trains carrying the national guard from various eastern states passed within a short distance of the courts. The fans in the stands stood up and cheered wildly as the soldiers passed en route to the Mexican border.

WATCH DUNDEE TRAIN.

EVANS IS VICTOR IN GOLF TOURNAMENT

Minneapolis, Minn., July 1.—Giving the greatest exhibition ever staged in a national open champion, Charles Evans, jr., of Chicago, won the annual classic with a card of 286. Even with this record breaking total, he was closely pressed!, Jack Hutchinson, of Pittsburg, finishing only two strokes behind.

Evans' win was a popular one, as all of the spectators were pulling for him to win, although there were hot local favorites like Sargent and Vardon playing in the profesional ranks. His morning and afternoon rounds were followed by the largest galleries of the day, although J. M. Barnes, the Whitemarsh professional, closest to Evans at the start of the final round, also drew a large gallery.

Evans had scored 139 yesterday and went out and in in an aggregate of 74, taking one stroke less in the final round for a total of 147 for the day.

There were lower scores made on every round, but Evans won by his steadiness and ability to pick up after troublesome holes.

Jack Hutchinson, who scored 148 yesterday, made the thirty-six holes in 72 and 68, respectively, the afternoon score lowering the course record. When Hutchinson came in it was thought that J. M. Barnes was to lead the professionals, but Hutchinson crowded the entire gallery of pros down a notch until it required a 207 or better to get the money. The scores of the amateurs were not taken into consideration in making up the profesional money list.

LAST OF THE THREE EVENTS PLAYED TODAY

Much interest is being manifested in the outcome of the Pidgeon-Ralston affair in the last of the three spring golf tournaments—the M. C. MacDougal, S. S. Fisher and B. Paul Mossman events—played at the Fort Wayne Country club today. The line-up was as follows:

C. H. Pidgeon vs. William Ralston, in the MacDougal tourney; James M. Barrett vs. B. Paul Mossan, in the Fisher tourney; F. Shoaff vs. P. C. Enninger, in the Mossman tourney.

The play will be over the 36-hole route in each case. The contests were started this morning and the first eighteen holes were played before the noon hour.

FRED RUSSELL HANGS UP VERY SPEEDY MILE

Indianapolis, July 1—Fred Russell, 2:04, has just stepped a mile in 2:07¼ over the Indianapolis track, it being the fastest reported during the present season. Harry Hersey, the man who drove Dan Patch to the world's mark of 1:55¼, was up with the horse. Fred Russell has been entered in the $5,000 board of commerce stake at Detroit and in several other events which make fast time for the Grand circuit this year. The early showing of Fred Russell marks him as a contender for the money on the "once around" the present season.

Evangelist Says He Will Hit Traffic "Between the Eyes."

SOME NIPPERISMS IN TABLOID FORM

When you hear a little boy swear, you are listening to the harvest of somebody's sowing.

If you skin a man in a horse trade you must expect to get skinned.

Eve sowed the seed of disobedience and reaped a harvest of it in Cain. Jacob sowed the seed of deceit and reaped a harvest of it in his own children.

Just as the "rum bunch" starts to crawl to its feet after the great Fourth of July temperance rally, Rev. J. A. Nipper will step forward and once more lay out the booze demon by a blow between the eyes, with his famous sermon on "Booze," it was announced at the tent meeting on West Main street Friday night. The sermon which Rev. Nipper says will be a "for sure walloper," will be delivered Wednesday night and will be Nippers' second attack on the liquor traffic in his tent campaign for souls in Fort Wayne.

Traveling men are especially invited to the Sunday afternoon meeting which will be addressed by "Doc" Lane, the well-known traveling salesman and speaker of reputation. The session which is open to everybody will be of special interest to the men who spend their days and nights "on the road."

"The Man of Choice" is the subject upon which Rev. Nipper will talk Saturday night. Sunday night his subject will be "The Judgment Day." There will be no meeting on Tuesday as all the forces will be joined in the temperance rally planned for Lakeside park on the Fourth.

The tent was well filled Friday night. There was tumultous applause after the members of "the preachers' row" had made harmony with one stanza of the beautiful song "Sweeter As the Days Go By." The Rev. F. H. Tornmohlen, pastor of the Friend's church in Van Wert, Ohio, led in prayer. The offertory prayer was made by the Rev. E. E. Howe, of the Tabernacle Baptist church.

The sermon based upon the well-known words, "Whatsoever ye sow that shall ye reap," followed. Rev. Nipper literally burned the power of the text into the hearts of his hearers. Homely illustrations of sunflowers and morning glories, told in his characteristic way, brought out the natural results of physical seed sowing. All the anguish of misspent lives and the glory of right living were gathered into vivid word pictures to show the harvest of thoughts and deeds.

The audience sat entranced as it followed the recitation of one instance after another, taken by Rev. Nipper from the scarlet book of everyday life. With all the power of delivery he could gather he recalled again and again for his 500 auditors the significance of the simple utterance—"Be not deceived. God is not mocked. Whatsoever ye sow that shall ye also reap."

Rev. Nipper's Sermon.

Rev. Nipper took for his text "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." He spoke in part as follows:

There are two words in this text that are worth the consideration of everyone and they are the words "whatsoever" and "that." When we look at this text from this viewpoint you will clearly see that it is impossible to sow one thing and reap another, or sow a little and not reap a great deal. A man goes out into the field with one bag of grain. He is able to carry it on his shoulder, but after it is planted and harvested it takes several wagons to haul it in. So it is with the things that we sow. There has been many a person who has sowed an unkind word, and they have had a terrible burden to carry the load of condemnation around till it was forgiven. The harvest is greater than the sowing. We can sow the seeds of flowers, and when they are in bloom we love to smell their fragrance, but if we sow thorns there is danger of being injured by them, or in other words, we are in danger of casting our pearls before swine. For instance, here is a mother who has given her consent to a parlor dance and then her daughter meets a young fellow who takes her out. She is asked to go to a roof garden. Soon the time comes when the door must be left unlocked till the late hour of night, and sooner or later her own daughter comes home ruined. I tell you it is the old story of another mother casting one of her pearls before the swine of this world and wakes up to the fact that whatever she sows she must reap. Some men in the world haven't any more sense than small boys. When we think of a boy we think of springtime of life; when we think of man we think of the falltime of life. The small boy who starts out making fun of the other boys for going to Sunday school and is not taken in hand by a mother or father usually winds up in his older years, or in the falltime of his life, still mocking the best things in the world.

Be No Deceived.

The text says, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; whatever a man soweth that shall he also reap." One day while laying in a sidetrack—while I was a railroad man—I got off my engine and walked around through the corn that almost hid me from view and as I looked at it the waving blades seemed to say to me, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." When I looked across into another field where the grain was waving to and fro, just waiting for the harvester, it seemed to say to me, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." When I arrived in Richmond and was on my way downtown I heard a little boy let out a stream of oaths just like a man and again something seemed to say to me, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

If we sow the seed of disobedience we will reap a harvest of the same thing. Adam and Eve sowed the seed of disobedience and they reaped a whirlwind harvest. I haven't any doubt that they had talked to their children and had warned them, but they had sowed some very bad seed, and in Cain we find a large harvest of disobedience. Therefore, we find a family in the old bible that can bear testimony that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Again, you sow the seed of deceit and you always reap a harvest of it. Look at Jacob deceiving his old father and stealing the blessing from Esau. He used the skins of animals. Then when we look at another scene we find that after Jacob has become a father of twelve sons there springs up a feeling of jealousy between them on account of Joseph. He is sold to a band of Egyptians and then comes the harvest, Jacob's ow nchildren lying to him and deceiving him and making him believe something that is not true. So the same old story is true that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." David sowed the seed of lust and reaped a harvest of it; he sowed the seed of murder and reaped a harvest of it; he sowed the seed of rebellion and reaped a harvest of it.

Again, don't go too much on your own sincerity, because it is possible for you to be wrong. Here is a woman who has become ill and wants to take some medicine. She is sure that the kind she is taking will cure her, but it is poison and dies. She was sincere, but it meant and she dies. It may be you are taking just simply church membership for your salvation, which is not enough; it's right to belong to the church, but we should belong to God as well as the church, and they that belong to God are always the best in the church. So I am asking you to come and give yourself to him and begin to sow good seed from this night on.

No "New Models" in Mid-Season

THE Chandler Type 17 was a perfected car January 1st. It had back of it three years of refinement, three years of making good. There is no reason to change it or modify it or call it by some new name in mid-season.

Chandler Values are Permanent

The Chandler Type 17—thousands of them on the road today from coast to coast and giving the most satisfactory service—is distinctively the medium priced car of the year.

It's the car of a perfected motor, and the most beautiful body design. It is the car of greatest all around value and no marked up price. There is ample excuse for an advance in price, but it would not add to the value to increase the price.

Waukegan, Ill., July 1.—Harry J. Carlin, who one week after the death of Marion Lambert found the bottle of molasses and water which Will H. Orpet said he threw away when he fled from Marion's body, took the stand today in the trial of Orpet charged with the murder of Miss Lambert. Attorney David Joslyn, of the prosecution, doubled and twisted, seeking to betray the witness into a damaging admission. Carlin usually replied with a grin.

"When you came upon the bottle did it look the same to you as when you first saw it," asked Joslyn.

The witness said he called other persons who were with him on the search and drew their attention to the bottle. Joslyn asked why.

"Because I knew the bottle would figure in the case and that they would be called as witnesses."

In response to another query as to the reason for his actions, Carlin replied: "I was working for the defense to clear this boy—to establish his innocence."

Dorothy Mason, sister-in-law of Celestia Youker, and a friend of Marion Lambert, was the most eagerly awaited witness when the trial was resumed today. She is expected to testify that she told Marion Lambert of Orpet's alleged engagement to Miss Youker. The defense maintains that it was this information which prompted Marion to plan suicide. It is expected that the most of the day will be taken up in the examination of witnesses who searched for the bottle of molasses and water which Orpet said he brought from Madison to give Marion to alleviate her supposed condition.

An adjournment of the case over the Fourth of July holiday will be taken this afternoon.

TWELVE MORE DEATHS IS THE DAY'S RECORD

New York, July 1.—Infantile paralysis caused twelve more deaths in greater New York within the last twenty-four hours. Fifty-three new cases were reported. The scourge has claimed fifty-nine lives since last Saturday, while from January 1 until that time there were 17 deaths.

Since the spread of the disease patent medicine concerns have sent circulars broadcast, says a warning by the department of health. The department is taking steps to prevent any commercialization of the epidemic.

For the fiscal year ending Friday E. B. Thumma, deputy revenue collector, has made a report showing a total of $428,558.72 collected by the department. The sum is the largest ever collected by the Fort Wayne office and Mr. Thumma has wired the amount of his collections to the department at Washington in order that his report could be a part of the general report of the country.

The collections by months were as follows: July, 1915, $39,225.47; August, $37,337.36; September, $42,480.42; October, $31,626.37; November, $33,-094.62; December, $30,227.42; January, 1916, $31,705.34; February, $31,727.17; March, $34,508.99; April, $35,288.37; May, $45,384.16; June, $35,858.03.

Friday was the last day on which to pay the income tax and T. J. McLaughlin, deputy revenue collector, announced that all persons subject to tax in his territory had made payments, thus avoiding any penalty.

NAMED AS ARBITRATOR.

Harry K. Daugherty to Act in Nickel Plate Key Men's Case.

Washington, July 1.—Harry K. Daugherty, of Grove City, Pa., was named today by the United States board of mediation and conciliation as the neutral arbitrator between the New York Central and Nickel Plate railways and their telegraphers in differences over wages, vacations and pay for Sunday work. W. J. Fripp, general manager of the New York Central lines east, and J. Manion, vice-president of the Order of Railway Telegraphers, previously had been agreed upon as arbitrators. The first meeting of the arbitrators will be held in New York on July 6. About five thousand telegraphers are involved.

THREE MILLIONS PLEDGED.

Episcopal Church Pension Project Making Fine Progress.

New York, July 1.—Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, head of the movement in the Protestant Episcopal church to provide a thorough system of pensions for its clergymen, announced today that $3,000,000 of the necessary $5,000,000 fund had been pledged as the result of a four months' campaign. The plan will not be put under way until the full fund as a reserve is on hand.

All of the sixty-eight dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States have now formally adopted the pension plan and pledged it their support.

GRIEF OVER ACCIDENT NINE YEARS AGO KILLS.

New Albany, Ind., July 1.—John D. Sands, age 42, is dead of grief over an accident which occurred nine years ago, when he was a motorman of a car that ran over and killed Samue Hobson, a fellow employe. Sands was not blamed for the accident, but he resigned his position and since then has been confined to his home much of the time. He was a brother of Mrs. Volney Kirkpatrick, of Indianapolis.

DANIELS APPROVES NEW NAVAL PROGRAM

Washington, July 1.—Formal approval of the increased navy building program recommended by the senate naval committee in amending the annual appropriation bill passed by the house was given in a statement issued today by Secretary Daniels.

The committee, besides framing a program calling for four dreadnaughts and four battle cruisers, instead of five battle cruisers, only as provided by the house, wrote into the bill provision for completing within three years the general board's plan to add sixteen capital ships before 1922.

"It marks a radical new policy in the enlargement and increase in the navy," said Mr. Daniels' statement. "It is the first bill that has incorporated a continuing policy in the building of fighting ships. In his annual message to congress last December President Wilson placed emphasis upon the need of adopting a continuing policy."

Indianapolis, July 1.—The impression prevails here this afternoon that the Indiana guard may be on its way to the Mexican border by Monday night. The artillery battalion is packing all necessary field equipment and disposing of that which will not be taken. The artillery battalion is now completely mustered and equipped.

Eight companies of the third regiment also are ready to move. The four companies of the Third were ineligible to federal support. Kendallville, South Bend, Portland and Monticello still are waiting for word from Washington announcing thier reinstatement.

These units were suspended from federal support months ago because of lack of interest and non-attendance at drill, but reinstatement has been recommended.

George E. Bill, a representative of the Studebaker corporation, was at the camp arranging for the pay of twenty-two men of the Third regiment who are employes of that company. Mr. Bill arranged with Col. Aubrey L. Kuhlman, commander of the camp, to receive the full pay of the men and give it to them as long as they remain in service.

AUTO STRIKES SAFETY ROPE AND HURTS MAN

Henry Meyer, architect, living at 615 West Jefferson street, who was standing against the rope stretched by the police to form a safety zone in front of the wrecked Carnahan building on West Jefferson street, was hurled fifteen feet and sustained a strained back when D. F. Moore, 1118 South Calhoun street ran his automobile against the rope shortly before noon Saturday.

Moore was driving east on Jefferson street. He was looking up at the building from which the front wall had fallen a few hours before. He did not see the rope stretched across the street. He thought the way was clear until a policeman shouted to him, he said. He stretched the big rope to its tightest tension before he succeeded in stopping his machine.

Meyer was standing just inside the rope inclosure. He was discussing the causes for the accident, and pointing up at the third story of the damaged structure when Moore's machine struck the rope. Meyer was hurled several feet and thrown to the pavement. His back was slightly strained by the sudden blow.

"NATURE CHILDREN" LIVE IN WOODS ALL SUMMER.

Atlanta, Ga., July 1.—"Nature children" are roaming the woods, swimming the streams, climbing the trees and mocking the birds over an old battlefield at Jester's Old Mill, 16 miles from Atlanta!

Clad in flowing Grecian robes, or in less, they gambol among the forest glades and run at random over the grassy slopes—carefree, worryless, attuned to perfect health!

Athenian culture, Spartan courage, Olympian grace are the ideals ever-before these babes of the by-paths, whose parents have chosen this ancient method of giving their children an opportunity for right living and clear thinking.

Miss Robert Jester, a girl of 8, and George Alfred Jester, going on 3, were the pioneers of this child colony; now there are many more. Their parents go out from the city for the summer, and around the historic ante-bellum mill are now grouped a score of camp shacks, a dancing pavilion, swimming pool, bath houses, and roadhouse for auto parties.

The "nature children" romp over old trenches, now mossy and flower-strewn, that were dug by the confederates at the battle of Jonesboro. They explore the un-used mill-race, invade the homes of the bullfrog and the thrush, and win at first hand a love of nature, that, their parents believe, will make them better citizens in days to come.

San Antonio, July 1.—General Funston reserved comment upon the charges of bad faith made against him by Carranza's minister of foreign affairs and then concentrated his attention on the silent marshaling of his growing army along the border line.

Reports from General Pershing in Mexico and from headquarters commanders along the border reflected the preparations being made by the Mexican war department for a clash with the American army.

Troops trains are nearing the border from north, east and west, but increased efforts were made to keep from the public the actual schedules of the trains and the time of their arrival at destinations.

With the exception of the vanguard of the Illinois guardsmen that reached here last night no fresh troops have reached San Antonio, and will not before late today or tonight. One of the trains bearing guardsmen was slipping eastward along the border towards Brownsville, with a precision that was gratifying to army staff officers. Railway officials were moving throughout the United States scores of troop laden trains that will reach the border at hours known only to them and officers detailed for work in connection with the mobilization. On all lines where army officers and railway officials believed attempts might be made to interfere with the movement, small details of soldiers have been sent and bridges were under guard.

Washington, July 1.—There was turned back into the treasury today $636,971 saved during the past fiscal year in the purchase of sites and on construction of public buildings through the policy of limiting expenses to the requirement of a community rather than using all of any sum appropriated by congress. Just 102 new buildings were completed during the year.

HONORS FOR LOUISE METZGER.

A beautiful home wedding took place Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock when Miss Hulda Schmidt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Schmidt, became the bride of Mr. Herbert Bleeke, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed C. Bleeke, of Decatur. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. Philip Wambsganss. The veil was fashioned in cap effect with a wreath of swansonia. Miss Ella Bleeke, a sister to the groom, was bridesmaid and looked exceedingly well in a gown of pink satin with a bouquet of pink Killarney roses. The maid of honor, Miss Leba Schmidt, a sister of the bride, was dressed in a pretty embroidered organdie hung over silk and her flowers were sunburst roses. A brother of the bride, Mr. Oscar Schmidt, was best man. The music for the wedding was that from "Lohengrin" and the bride entered with her father, who gave her away. A banking of palms and ferns and a white kneeling bench were the appropriate surrounding for the bridal party during the marriage service. Mrs. A. J. Bleeke sang "O Promise Me" and during the ceremony "I Love You Truly." Prof German presided at the piano. The house was tastefully decorated with smilax, roses and garden flowers and a handsome wedding cake formed the decoration of the bride's table. About fifty guests were present. SHOP AND RAILROAD NEWS

William Littlejohn has retired from the forge, after working at the blacksmith's trade over a half-century. Since the early part of 1905 Mr. Littlejohn was employed in the blacksmith shop of the General Electric works until last evening, when he served notice on Foreman Henry C. Lepper that he would retire from the service and spend the balance of his life in ease, being about seventy-five years old. No man ever was more popular with his shop associates than is Mr. Littlejohn and this sentiment was expressed in the actions and words of the employes at the blacksmith shop when they learned that the aged blacksmith was resigning. Before going to the Electric works Mr. Littlejohn worked at the Wabash a third of a century, resigning to go to Jackson, Mich., where he remained only a few months.

A. L. Hadley, L. D. Nordstrum and W. W. Griffiths, of the engineering department of the General Electric works, are en route to Lake James this afternoon. Mr. Griffiths will remain there two weeks, but Mr. Hadley and Mr. Nordstrum will return to resume their duties in the works Wednesday morning.

Because of the heavy movement of National Guards over the line, the Nickel Plate announces that it is short on coaches and can furnish none but those in the regular trains for Sunday or other excursion business. Up to date the company has handled twelve train loads of soldiers, each train requiring from six to twelve coaches, and the movement is not yet over. One of the officials said this morning that there would be five or six more soldier trains over the line today or tonight and more were in sight for early next week. The Nickel Plate's position on the passenger equipment question, the following bulletin issued by John Y. Callahan, general passenger agent, explains the situation:

"Due to movement of United States troops to the Mexican border, all available coaches owned by the Nickel Plate road (excepting those necessary for service in regular trains), have been placed at the disposal of a properly designated United States government official.

"Therefore, when purchasing Sunday excursion tickets, please consider your personal comfort in space available in our coaches, as no extra coaches will be added to any of our trains.

"If purchasers of tickets decide not to use same, and will return them to selling agent on date of purchase, their money will be refunded."

Tickets are not on sale at the Wabash depot, but can be secured at the following places: Alter's cigar store, Reigel's cigar store, D. & N. pharmacy, Long's Novelty House, Hoham's pharmacy, Meinzen's drug store, on Maumee road and Walton avenue; Koehlinger's drug store, on East Washington street; Meyer Brothers, at Broadway and Taylor street; Jacob Bill drug store, East Creighton avenue; Lakeside Pharmacy, Hutzell drug store, West Main street; Gocke drug store, Broadway; Miller's pharmacy, Fairfield avenue; Koeho's drug store, East Lewis; Albersmeyer drug store, Wells street; Northside pharmacy, Wells street, and by all employes of the Fort Wayne Box company. A free trip through the great Fort plant will be one of the entertainment features of the trip. A second train may be sent out, if it is found necessary. Safety and comfort is the slogan of the committee in charge.

Baldwin lake, in Michigan, has suddenly become a great favorite resort place with the Nickel Plate enginemen and trainmen. Beginning tomorrow there will be a dozen or more conductors, engineers, firemen and brakemen from Bellevue and Fort Wayne at that resort and a number nearly as great have just returned from there. WILL CLOSE MONDAY.

In order to give the employes a chance to enjoy a longer vacation over the Fourth of July, the Wayne Oil Tank works will be shut down as far as possible next Monday. However, in order not to fall behind in filling their orders, which are particularly pressing at this time of the year, it will be necessary for the shop to work on Saturday afternoon. Many of the employes are taking advantage of this three day vacation to go on trips outside the city.

FACE PAINFULLY BURNED.

As he applied a light to one of the oil furnaces in the rock drill department of the General Electric works yesterday afternoon, J. Sanger was painfully burned by an explosion of the gas that had accumulated. The flames singed his eyebrows and hair badly and blistered a part of his face. Dr. F. J. Schulz attended the man. He found a shortage in that craft here, equal to the shortage at Decatur. The two men he secured were strangers in the city.

TASK OF COMMISSION TO UNSCRAMBLE EGGS

Indianapolis, July 1.—Auditors of the public service commission who have just completed an examination of the books of the Fort Wayne & Northern Indiana Traction company, have revealed some interesting chapters in early interurban railway finance in Indiana. The audit was made in the case in which the city of Fort Wayne is asking for an adjustment of electric rates.

One of the problems of the commission, that may be solved at the time the evidence in the case is taken, is "unscrambling the eggs." Hidden away in a mass of figures in the audit is the simple statement, "addition stock account $2,910,263.90 and additional bonds, $1,567,000." There is no explanation of these items.

The "additional stock and bond accounts appears in the audit at the time the Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction company was reorganized or at the time this company swallowed smaller ones, and the Fort Wayne & Northern Indiana Traction company was formed.

Whether the patrons are expected to pay rates based on $4,447,283.90 of water; the total of the stock and bond accounts unexplained, or whether it is a legitimate account will be one of the eggs to be unscrambled.

Big Company Took Over Little Ones.

The Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley company, at the time of the merger, was the leading company into which a dozen or so companies had just been merged. That total of $4,477,283.90 would have to be shown on the balance sheet of the company as a liability which the company owed to the persons who got this "additional stock and additional bonds." And if this was to be shown as a liability, a corresponding asset must be shown to balance the books and some assertions have been made that attorneys for the city of Fort Wayne will show the total property accounts of all the subsidiary organizations amounted to $4,477,283.90 less than the total of the property account charged as an asset on the balance sheet of the organized company.

The Fort Wayne company now shows on its books total assets of $20,455,745.71 and a total property account of $17,958,814.48. In 1911 the company showed a property account of $16,864,690.94 and total assets of $17,376,497.27. That was the development of five years.

It is shown in the audit of the company that it paid for the construction and equipment of a line from Fort Wayne to Bluffton, $1,063,181.03, and for the construction and equipment of a line from Lafayette to Logansport, $1,662,113.77.

The audit shows company officials are relating facts when they tell of the decrease in revenues in the last few years. The audit also shows small dividends have been paid and that interest has been paid on a big bonded indebtedness.

The Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction company, which eventually became the Fort Wayne & Northern Indiana Traction company, was organized Feb. 25, 1904, with a capital stock of $7,500,000. J. Levering Jones, Charles Murdock, Hugh J. McGowan, Randall Morgan, George McCullough and Bayard ually absorbed smaller companies.

The audit shows June 26, 1913, the company bought the property of the Lafayette Street Railway company, giving $375,000 in bonds of the Wabash Valley Traction company, assuming liabilities of $16,750 and a mortgage indebtedness of $225,000.

Smaller Lines Were Absorbed.

Under date of Feb. 25, 1904, the company bought the properties of the Fort Wayne Traction company, the Wabash River Traction company, the Wabash-Logansport Traction company, the Logansport Railway company, the Logansport, Rochester and Northern Traction company for $900,000 in preferred stock, $6,000,000 in common stock and $1,500,000 in bonds of the Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley Traction company. The company assumed considerable bonded indebtedness, and immediately issued $7,500,000 in bonds.

The Fort Wayne and Southwestern Traction company and the Fort Wayne Electric Light and Power company was purchased May 20, 1904, for $25,000 in cash, $100,000 in preferred stock and $1,635,000 in bonds of the Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley company.

The Fort Wayne, Bluffton and Marion Traction company was purchased in 1906 for the assumption of its bonded indebtedness of $400,000. The Fort Wayne Power company was purchased in 1908 for $1,800 cash and bonds of $100,000 assumed.

The entire lot, bag and baggage, was sold to the Fort Wayne and Northern Indiana Traction company under date of Feb. 16, 1911, for $4,000,000 in common stock of the new company and $2,500,000 in preferred stock.

Light Company Already Purchased.

The Lafayette and Logansport Traction company had purchased the Carroll Electric Light company, of Delphi, and both became a part of the Wabash Valley Traction company. Another road was added to the system when the Fort Wayne and Northern Indiana built the Fort Wayne, Bluffton and Marion Traction company.

The Fort Wayne and Northern Indiana Traction company now has underlying bonds as follows: Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley, $6,966,000; Fort Wayne, Bluffton and Marion, $100,000; Lafayette and Logansport, $849,000; Fort Wayne Power company, $57,000; Fort Wayne Traction company, $20,000; Wabash River company, $275,000; Lafayette Street Railway, $225,000; Logansport Railroad company, $5,000, and second mortgage bonds on the Fort Wayne and Wabash Valley company of $92,000.

As showing the decrease of earnings the comparative balance sheet shows from 1904 to 1911 the total earnings were $8,563,519.22, and from 1911 to 1915, $8,337,609.89. The net income for the first period was $588,661 and for the second period, $544,494.

GIANT CAKE CUT TO FEED HUNGRY.

Here it is—the largest cake ever baked on the Pacific coast. It was made for the Owl Drug company, of San Francisco, in honor of the twenty-fourth birthday of the firm, which maintains a string of twenty-two stores on the west coast.

The giant confection was cut into 5,000 slices and distributed among a multitude of citizens. A corps of pastry experts worked two weeks to make it. It weighed 800 pounds, was five feet high, four feet in diameter and contained eighteen cubic feet of sweetness.

Fifty pounds of butter, 2,100 eggs, 100 pounds of sugar, 100 pounds of jelly filling and 150 pounds of frosting were required in its construction. On the top was a pastry reproduction of an owl.

Winona Lake, Ind., July 1.—It begins to look very much as though the Winona assembly would have a new auditorium in the near future. At a meeting of the committee on arrangements of the Church of the Brethren at their recent conference held at this place, a resolution was unanimously adopted favoring a general appeal throughout all the districts of this denomination asking for subscriptions to apply toward the expense of the proposed auditorium. Since the Church of the Brethren has decided to hold its general conference at Winona Lake every three years the need of a more commodious assembly room is strongly felt.

The proposed site for the new edifice is directly in front of the administration building in the large enclosure which is surrounded on all sides by a grape arbor. The post of the structure has not been definitely fixed but it will be modern in every way, and fully equipped to accommodate the largest crowds that assemble at this popular resort. The present auditorium is altogether inadequate for many of the large chautauqua attractions as well as for the Bible conference.

It is known to a few of the Winona officials that Mr. E. O. Excell, chairman of the board of directors, sent a letter to the committee of arrangements of the Church of the Brethren while they were in session here offering to pay $1,000 toward the new auditorium if it is decided to build it. He furthermore stated that he would make his subscription equal to one-tenth of any sum they might raise among their members. Mr. Excell has been one of the heaviest financial supporters of Winona in recent years, having personally contributed more than any other individual.

Hon. William Jennings Bryan, who is now the president of the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference, also sent a letter to the officials of the Church of the Brethren, approving their plans regarding the erection of a mammoth auditorium on the grounds. He also expressed the wish that they might be successful in the undertaking. Dr. Sol C. Dickey, general secretary of Winona, has for several years looked forward to the time when a new auditorium would be provided and has announced that with the promised co-operation of the great Dunkard church, the building can easily be ready within the next two years.

Friends of Winona are enthusiastic over the outlook for the future. The cottages are well filled and an air of confidence generally prevails. The program, which is to open on Sunday, July 2nd, includes some of the most notable attractions of this country and will be a higher average than any ever presented here.

The chief feature of Patriotic day, which is to be observed on Tuesday, July 4th, will be an address by Charles W. Fairbanks. He will speak at 2:30 on the subject, "A World Tour."

Berlin, June 15.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Scientific experiments with the divining rod conducted by Germans over a period of months in the desert wastes of Syria and Eastern Egypt—approximately in the district of the new railway line being built toward the Suez Canal—not only have resulted in the discovery of water, but have proved that the scorned and flouted rod is about 70 per cent infallible, according to Dr. Th. Preyer, formerly in the German consular service, who is a practical scientist himself. He admits that he should belong to that majority of intelligent persons who deride the divining rod as a swindle if he had not been able to see it work for four months.

Dr. Preyer admits that he does not know the secret of the divining rod, and that seemingly a peculiarly "gifted" man must use the instrument to have success. He believes that science will discover that subterranean streams flowing under pressure, emit rays like the radio-active rays of some springs which force their way through the earth and affect certain peculiarly constituted persons.

He describes Major von G——, who used the rod in Egypt, as a remarkably nervous man who becomes "tuned up" to an unusual tension when he takes the rod into his hands and begins to walk across the desert.

The major generally uses an iron rod, for, though it is less sensible to the mysterious forces which make it tremble, it works satisfactorily because of his highly developed "gifts." He has, however, and occasionally uses, rods of wood, aluminum and silver, which are increasingly sensitive in the order named.

The iron rod never gives a hint about the character of the water which it reveals, and the major for a time discovered continually that the streams so painstakingly dug out were brackish and salt, filled with water impossible for human consumption. Finally, however, he found that a rod of aluminum and bronze, held over a spot at which the iron rod had signalled water, would fly upwards if the water was fresh and drinkable, but remain unresponsive or drop downward if the water was salt. This instrument, however, cannot always be trusted, for there are cases on record in which it signalled salt water, and was unaffected by the clear, good water that was found under a stratum of salt.

The major's later experiments have been made in a section of country where water has never been known. The district is four by twenty kilometers in extent, and yet water is said to have been found now at depths of fifty and fifty-five meters in a number of places.

HARRISON HILL PLAT SHOWS MODERN IDEAS

Many people interested in the latest developments of city planning are surprised to find that one of the newest features advocated in the books of Charles Mulford Robinson, the famous city planning expert, have already been incorporated in the plat of Harrison Hill, the coming addition located in the angle formed by Calhoun street and Rudisill boulevard. This feature is the arrangement of playgrounds for the children in a strip separating the rear ends of lots facing in opposite directions, occupying the space that would be taken up by alleys in an addition layed out upon the old style idea. This playground is forty-eight feet wide, and because of its location between the rear ends of the lots prevents the children from getting out in the street during their romps. Many other modern features have been included in Harrison Hill. Details regarding these may be secured from Hilgeman and Schaaf, North American building.

Swiss Industries to Get American Machinery and Supplies.

Berne, Switzerland, July 1.—Swiss industries using machinery have taken united action for the purchase of supplies from machinery and tool firms in the United States instead of from Germany as formerly. The action was the result of a continued rise in German prices and the presentation of new claims for payment in French francs instead of in the German marks at low exchange rate. Negotiations in this connection have been opened with American consuls in Switzerland.

SEVENTH INSTALLMENT

Lieut. Jarvis Hope is detailed by the United States naval board to investigate and report his findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke, which serves to bring the submarine to a state of perfection. The lieutenant arrives in Valdavia and is welcomed by the inventor and his daughter, Cleo. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat, a Japanese helper is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism of the ventilating device. Hope reports favorably on the new device but there are others interested in it. An attempt to burglarize Doctor Burke's laboratory fails, but later Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom. Cleo sells her father's library to get money; later she finds a note from which she learns that they contain the secret formula. With Hope she races to the auctioneer's store only to find it in flames. Olga Ivanoff and Gerald Morton, two spies in search of the formula, attempt to capture Cleo when she calls at the house of Stephanski, the anarchist. Hope rushes to her aid; Morton shoots at him but the bullet hits a bomb, in the cellar, which explodes. Stephanski dies in the wreck of his house; the others escape. Hope and Cleo attend a ball at Mrs. Delmar's, whose nephew has two of the missing books. Mahlin, a spy, attempts to steal the books, but is discovered by Hope; in the excitement that follows the books disappear. Mahlin escapes. Hope and Cleo take a boat for an island out in the bay. The conspirators follow in other boats. Mahlin and the Jap turn out the island light. Morton's boat with the countess strikes a stray mine in the bay.

For the three in the little launch it was a night of unforgettable terror. The elements seemed united to destroy them. The wind howled and the sea roared like monsters ravening their prey. But at last a pale, faint light began to overspread the eastern sky. It was a cold, gray dawn, but to those in the launch it was the most beautiful that they had ever seen, for it showed them the misty outline of an island rising, not half a mile away, above the storm-lashed sea.

"Thank God!" said Hope devoutly. "The lord be praised!" echoed Morissey, and they both glanced instinctively at Cleo, who, wrapped in Hope's overcoat, half lay, half sat, in the water which was swashing about the cockpit, almost unconscious from exposure and exhaustion.

"That's not Middle island," said Morissey, staring intently. "If it was we could see the radio station. It must be one of the North Farallons. It looks like an ugly shore to land on, with a wind like this blowing."

But, as they forged slowly nearer, they saw with relief that what appeared from a distance to be a solid rampart of rock was broken here and there by fissures which widened into coves and inlets, and that these coves and inlets had, for the most part, sandy shores on which a small boat, such as theirs could be beached without serious danger of being wrecked. Just as the first rays of the rising sun gilded the tops of the cliffs the launch glided between the barrier reefs into the smooth waters of one of these coves and Hope staggered ashore with Cleo in his arms.

Laying her gently on the shingle, he stripped off her water-soaked shoes, while Morissey hastily collected a pile of driftwood and saturated it with gasoline. Soon they were warming their chilled bodies and benumbed limbs before a blazing fire. In the base of the cliff behind them centuries of erosion had produced a cave as large as a good-sized room, and into this cave Hope and Morissey carried the cushions from the launch and some tarpaulins, which they found in one of the lockers.

"Now, Cleo," said Hope, "you had better go in and undress and dry your clothes in front of the fire. If you don't, we will have a girl with pneumonia on our hands. While you are getting dry, Morissey and I will try to climb to the top of the cliffs and see if there is any food or shelter on the island."

The ascent of the cliffs proved even more difficult than Hope had anticipated, for, though he and Morissey penetrated several of the fissures in the expectation of finding a path to the top, they came each time to narrow crevices or unscalable walls of rock. Their patience was eventually rewarded, however, by discovering a narrow and precipitous trail which led them, after half an hour's hard climbing, to the tableland which formed the roof, as it were, of the island.

"The best thing for us to do, Morissey," said Hope, "is to separate. You follow the line of the cliffs in one direction and I'll go in the other. We'll work right around until we meet each other again."

"Aye, aye, sir," said Morissey obediently, and off he started.

For nearly an hour Hope walked steadily, clambering over rocks and bowlders, pushing his way through dense underbrush, scrambling across ravines. The storm had disappeared, and the Pacific, as though exhausted by its passions of the night, basked languorously beneath the sun. So wild, so deserted, was the appearance of the island, that the young officer had almost abandoned hope of its having any inhabitants, when, rounding a shoulder of rock, he saw against the skyline the figure of a man. In response to Hope's shout, the stranger, a tall, sun-bronzed man of middle age, came scrambling down the rocky hillside.

"I had no idea that there was anyone else on the island," he said, in a pleasant, well-modulated voice.

"And I had begun to think that I was a Robinson Crusoe," said Hope, laughing.

"What are you doing over here?" asked the other curiously. "Fishing?"

"No," said Hope; "I'm a shipwrecked sailor, and though I'm not exactly starving, I will be if I have to go without food much longer," and he related briefly their experiences in the storm and how they had found refuge on the island.

"By the way," he added, "do you happen to have any gasoline? We can't get away from here until we get some."

"I can give you and your friends something to eat," was the answer, "but I haven't any gasoline. I'm only here myself because of the storm. You see," he explained, "I'm in the coast survey."

"By Jove!" exclaimed Hope, stopping dead, "then you must know the man we're looking for. He's in the coast survey, too. His name is Fitzmaurice—Arthur Fitzmaurice."

"You're talking to him," was the answer.

"Well, I'll be hanged!" Hope ejaculated. "Talk about having luck!"

"What did you want to see me about?" inquired Fitzmaurice.

"I was told by an auctioneer named Dawson, in San Francisco, that last week you bought three books of him at auction. They were scientific works—on hydrography, if I remember rightly."

"Right you are," said the other. "Hydrography is in my line, you know, so when I saw those books on the auction list that Dawson sent me, I went over to his place and bid them in. They came from the library of a Doctor Burke, didn't they?"

"Yes," said Hope, "and it's Doctor Burke's daughter who is waiting down at the cove. It was not until after the disposal of the library that she learned that her father had left a legacy for her in one of the books. So, when she heard that three of the books were in your possession, she insisted on coming with me in order to examine them for herself. That explains how I happen to be on this island in company with an extremely attractive young woman. I suppose you left the books over on Middle island."

"No," said Fitzmaurice, "it happens that two of the books are here in my shack. I brought them over yesterday, intending to look them over, but I was so dead tired last night that I didn't even open them. The third book isn't here, I'm sorry to say, but you can get it without much trouble. I loaned it to a friend, Dr. Emerson Owen, who lives at a little placed called Sandsboro, on the mainland. Miss Burke is very welcome indeed to see the two books that I have with me, however."

When Mahlin and Satsuma had extinguished the light on Southeast island, after sandbagging the lighthouse keeper, they were as certain that they had permanently ridded themselves of Hope and Cleo as though they had seen their lifeless bodies washed upon the shore. It never entered their heads that the little launch, with no friendly light to guide it past the rocks, could live through such a storm. Callously disregarding the groans of the injured keeper, they made themselves comfortable in his quarters and the next morning, the storm having abated, they set out for Middle island in search of Fitzmaurice, only to learn from the officer in charge of the radio station that the man for whom they were looking had left the day before for one of the North Farallons and that he had not yet returned.

About the same time, therefore, that Hope, Cleo, and Morissey were drying themselves before their fire at one end of the island, Mahlin and Satsuma were landing from their launch at the other end.

3—Down, Down, He Went, Straight as an Arrow.

Though there was no one in sight when the two conspirators landed, they noted signs of recent blasting operations, presumably for the purpose of improving the little harbor, while on the shore had been erected a rude hut for the storage of the workmen's tools. So little was there to fear from marauders in this remote spot that there was not even a lock on the door of the toolhouse, whose only contents, as Mahlin found upon investigation, were some picks, shovels, and crowbars, a keg of nails, a few coils of wire, and a box marked "Dynamite."

Following the directions given them by the officer at the radio station, they followed the precipitous footpath which led from the landing up the rocky slope to the plateau. Twenty minutes of stiff climbing brought them to the shack where, so they had been told, they would probably find Fitzmaurice staying. The shack, a flimsy affair of rough lumber, hung literally between sea and sky, for half of it rested on the rock, while the other half, which was supported by a framework of light timbers, overhung the ocean.

There being no response to his knock, Mahlin, finding the door unlocked, entered the cabin. Though the single room which it contained was vacant, the remains of a meal on the table and the rumpled blankets on the bunk, which was built against the wall, together with the odor of tobacco smoke, showed that it had been very recently occupied. Suddenly Satsuma, who had been prowling about the room, gave an exclamation.

"You're right," he said. "They're the very books we're after. Here's Burke's name written in them. We'd better take them and go while the going's good. It might be unhealthy for us if this fellow Fitzmaurice should—"

"I thought I heard voices," he whispered, laying the books on the table.

Stepping to the door, he caught sight of Hope and Fitzmaurice approaching the cabin.

"Hell's bell!" snarled Mahlin. "We didn't drown that fool nacal officer after all. Here he comes and he's got a man with him. Bring those books along, Satsuma; we'll have to make a break for it," and he darted out of the cabin.

The Japanese, pausing only long enough to snatch up the books, followed. As he appeared in the doorway of the shack Hope recognized him.

"By heaven!" he cried, "it's Satsuma!" and he dashed forward with Fitzmaurice at his heels. But Mahlin and Satsuma did not await them. The former fled down the path leading to the harbor where they had left their launch, while the Japanese, momentarily confused by Hope's unexpected appearance, turned and ran blindly in the opposite direction.

"I'll take the Jap!" Hope shouted to Fitzmaurice. "He's got the books I'm after. You attend to the other fellow."

The chase which followed led across a country broken by unexpected outcroppings of rocks, by stretches of loose stones, by enormous crags and bowlders; it led across furze-covered hillsides and other hillsides carpeted with wild wiregrass. Suddenly, when his pursuer was only a few paces behind him, Satsuma swerved and dashed down a narrow path which apparently promised a means of escape. But instead of leading down the cliff, as he had supposed, it ended abruptly on a precipice-bordered headland. The Japanese could go no farther! Behind him was a pursuer whom he knew to be relentless; before him a dizzy precipice, and at the foot of it, two hundred feet below, the sea. Hope, confident that Satsuma could not now escape, was advancing on him determinedly when all at once the Oriental whipped out a pistol, there was a flash and bang, and a bullet sang past Hope's head. He threw himself against a rock, and as he did so a second bullet spattered itself against it. Whenever he showed himself Satsuma's pistol spat angrily. Hope kept count of the shots and at the sixth he sprang forward recklessly. But the Japanese had still another catridge in his pistol and he was determined that that cartridge should do its work. Resting the barrel of his weapon against a bowlder, he waited until his pursuer was almost upon him before firing. But, at the very instant that Satsuma's finger tightened on the trigger, Hope's foot caught in a root and he fell headlong, while the bullet, which was meant for his heart, whistled harmlessly over his shoulder. As Hope bounded to his feet, the Japanese, tossing away the empty pistol, ran to the very edge of the cliff. He still held the precious books in his hand. Hope divined his intention.

"You might as well give up, Satsuma," he called. "And if you destroy those books it will go all the harder for you. Come, now, hand them over."

"You'll never get the books," snarled the Japanese, and with the words he flung them into the abyss.

"But I'll get you!" shouted Hope, beside himself with anger, and he leaped at Satsuma, who stood poised on the precipice's very brink.

"You'll not get me, either," replied the Oriental with an oath, and, just as Hope was about to clutch him, he turned and leaped. Down, down, down he went, straight as an arrow and as gracefully, and as cleanly as an arrow he disappeared into the sea. A long moment elapsed before Hope, standing on the cliff above, saw a sleek black head bob above the water and Satsuma, apparently none the worse for his perilous dive, struck out lustily for the shore. He had not gone far, however, before a launch shot around the headland and a man whom Hope recognized, even at that distance, as Satsuma's companion, pulled the Japanese aboard.

As Hope was slowly making his way back to the shack he met Fitzmaurice.

"The fellow I was chasing got away from me," said the latter. "He had a launch waiting for him in the cove. What happened to the Japanese that you were after? I thought I heard some shots."

"He got away, too," said Hope. "He tried to get me with an automatic, but he wasn't a good shot. When he saw that I had him cornered he threw the books over the cliff and then jumped after them."

"Well, there's no use in crying over spilled milk," Fitzmaurice remarked consolingly. "That was a mighty tough pair of citizens and I'm glad that they've departed. I never dreamed, when I came over here yesterday, that I was going to step right into the middle of a real blood-and-thunder drama like this. Why, it beats the Old Cap Collier stories that I used to read when I was a youngster. The thing for us to do now," he added, "is to go up to the shack and get some food and take it down to Miss Burke. The poor girl must be almost dead from hunger."

Having filled their pockets with the small store of food which Fitzmaurice had remaining, they were leaving the shack when Morissey hailed them. He explained that he had followed the line of the cliffs without seeing anyone.

It was drawing on toward noon when they reached the cave where they had left Cleo. From within it came the sound of voices in animated conversation.

"That's Cleo's voice," said Hope in surprise, "but who on earth can she be talking to?"

"Well, I'll be hanged!" said Hope, stopping dead with astonishment at the sight of the one-armed sailor. "What on earth are you doing here, Hook? I thought we had left you in a saloon in San Francisco. How did you get here?"

"I don't know 'zactly myself, lootenant," said Hook, a trifle sheepishly. "Morissey here wuz a tinkerin' with his ingine and, sez I to myself, 'It'll be half an hour before they're ready to start, so I'll just step acrost the street and get a drink,' but when I got back, lootenant, you wuz gone. Waal, I wuz a-standin' there, wonderin' what I'd better do, when up comes a taxi and who should get out of it but thet feller Morton. He had a girl with him—a stunner she wuz, too—and a little, dark feller who looked's though he might be a furriner. 'I wonder what they're doin' round here?' sez I to myself, and, thinkin' that I'd overhear their conversation, I steps behind a lumber pile and I hears 'em ask the watchman ef he knowed where they could hire a launch to go to the Farallons. He told 'em there warn't no launch, but he guessed thet they could hire the Sea Hawk. You 'member her, lootenant, the big sixty-footer thet was tied up alongside Morissey's launch?"

"Yes," said Hope, "I remember her. Go on with your story."

"Ez soon's I heered thet they wuz a goin' to the Farallons, I made up my mind thet I'd go along, too, so's to keep an eye on 'em, for I hadn't never hed much use fer thet feller Morton. So, when no one wuz a lookin', I jest slipped aboard and hid myself in a sort o' locker forrard o' the cabin. I found some cushions and a piece o' tarpaulin there and made myself as snug and shipshape ez could be. Waal, I reckon I musta fell asleep after the boat started, fer the next thing I knowed there wuz a noise like a million thunderclaps put together—it 'minded me o' thet time the magazine blew up on the old Mohican off Coronel—and the Sea Hawk seemed to sorta fall apart around me and I wuz shot about a million feet up in the air. I guess I must lost track o' things for a while, for the next thing I knowed I wuz in the water, hangin' onto a plank for dear life and hollerin' for someone to pick me up. It was as dark as the inside uv a pocket and there wuz a big sea runnin'. I kept on a hollerin' for a while, but no one answered, so I made up my mind thet all the others musta bin lost. 'I reckon you're headed straight for Davy Jones' locker this time, Hook Barnacle,' sez I to myself, but I hung onto my plank like grim death, expectin' every minit to be washed off, and after a while it began to get light and I seed thet I wuz headin' straight fer this here island. What with hangin' onto the plank and floating about in the water all night and not havin' nothing to eat, I wuz so doggone weak when I reached the shore thet I jest fell down on the sand and went sound asleep. I musta slept quite some time, fer the sun was pretty high when I woke up; so, thinkin' I'd see ef I could find something to eat, I started to walk up the shore. I hadn't gone more'n a mile or so when I seed the smoke uv a fire, and who should I see a settin' in front o' it but Miss Cleo here! That's all there is to my yarn, lootenant, 'cept thet I'm so blamed hungry thet I could eat a house."

"Not a thing, lootenant," asserted Hook. "There ain't no manner o' doubt but thet the old Sea Hawk went down with everyone on board 'cept me."

"We heard an explosion, you remember, sir," said Morissey, "just about the time the Southeast island light went out. It seemed somewhere to windward of us."

"Yes," said Hope, "I remember it now. It must have been the explosion on the Sea Hawk that we heard. I can't imagine what could have caused it, though. It's another unsolved mystery of the sea."

"Well, here's another mystery of the sea for you to solve, Jarvis," said Cleo, who, during Hook's recital, had been standing with her hands behind her, and she suddenly flashed before the unbelieving eyes of Hope and Fitzmaurice the very books which Satsuma had thrown over the cliff!

Hope emitted a long whistle of astonishment.

"Where on earth did you get them, Cleo?" he asked, staring at the water-soaked volumes as though his eyes were deceiving him.

"They came in the same way that Hook did," she answered. "They were washed up by the sea."

"Did you find anything in them, Miss Burke?" inquired Fitzmaurice, who had been listening with absorbed interest to the conversation.

"I haven't examined them yet," she replied. "They are so wet, you see, that the leaves are all stuck together. I'm going to put them in the sun and let them dry."

"I've a better plan than that," said Fitzmaurice. "Why don't you bring them up to my shack? We'll start a fire and while the books are drying you can lie down on my bunk and get some sleep. You must be nearly dead after last night's experience."

"That's a good idea," agreed Hope. "Miss Burke is very much in need of rest, though she won't admit it. But we must make some arrangements to get back to the city. I'm afraid we'll have to trouble you, Fitzmaurice, to take us over in your sailboat to Middle island. From there I can send a radio message to San Francisco for a boat to come out and get us."

"Excuse my making the suggestion, sir," said Morissey, "but why don't you let Hook and me go across to Middle island with Mr. Fitzmaurice and get some gasoline—they'll surely have some at the radio station—and bring it back in the sailboat."

We will now, in the parlance of the motion-picture people, "cut back" to Mahlin and Satsuma. After the Japanese had been rescued from the water by his co-conspirator, instead of heading for the mainland, they landed unobserved on the island and, taking every precaution not to be seen, they made their way to the summit of a brush-covered knoll which overlooked the shack. From here they saw the return of the party; they saw Hook, Morissey and Fitzmaurice descend the path leading to the cove where the latter's skiff was anchored, and they saw Cleo and Hope enter the shack. They saw, moreover, to their intense astonishment, that Hope was carrying the books which Satsuma had thrown into the sea.

"By making a big detour," said Mahlin, "we can creep along the edge of the cliff and get up to the shack without being seen, because it has no windows except at the front and back. Then, by crawling underneath, we can hear everything that goes on inside. They're evidently going to examine those books—heaven only knows where they got them! If they find the formula we'll hear them say so, in which case—" He concluded the sentence by significantly drawing his forefinger across his throat.

Owing to the necessity of avoiding observation, their progress was slow, and it was an hour later before they crawled between the timbers which supported the seaward side of the shack. Only the roughly laid board floor separated the two crouching beneath the shack from the unsuspecting pair within it. So near were they, indeed, to Hope and Cleo that, as Mahlin whispered to Satsuma, "We can hear 'em change their minds," they heard Cleo's yawns as she awakened from her nap and said "Aren't those books dry enough so that we can look at them now, Jarvis?"

A few minutes later came an ejaculation of impatience from Hope and the thud of a book tossed upon the floor. "There's nothing in that book—that's certain," he said, disgustedly, and, a little later, "Nor in this one."

Mahlin and Satsuma glanced at each other significantly. There was no need for them to trouble further about those two books.

"What shall we do now, Jarvis?" they heard Cleo ask.

"As soon as Hook and Morissey return with the gasoline we will start back," he answered. "But, instead of returning to San Francisco, what would you think of our making straight for Sandsboro? It's the little coast town where Doctor Owen lives—the man, you know, to whom Fitzmaurice loaned the other book."

Mahlin did not wait to hear anything more. Beckoning to Satsuma to follow, he crawled silently away. When they were out of earshot of the shack he turned to his companion.

Satsuma nodded.

Satsuma again nodded assentingly.

"Listen, then," said Mahlin. "When I was under the house there an idea struck me. Do you remember the little toolhouse that we saw down by the landing place?"

"Yes," said Satsuma, who was a person of few words.

"Hah!" exclaimed the Japanese comprehendingly, "I understand. A very good idea."

"Suppose," said Mahlin, instinctively lowering his voice, "that we put a few sticks of dynamite underneath that old shack and light the fuse. Then they'd have to collect what was left of Master Naval Lieutenant Hope and the girl with a shovel."

Darkness had fallen before the work of planting the dynamite was completed, for they had to work with the utmost caution in order not to attract the attention of Hope and Cleo, whom they could hear chatting gayly just above them.

"Listen, Jarvis!" Cleo whispered suddenly. "I heard a noise under the house!"

"Nonsense, dear," said Hope. "You're tired and nervous. It must have been the wind—or your imagination."

"It wasn't the wind and it wasn't my imagination. I know I heard something," insisted Cleo. "I'm going to see what it was," and she stepped to the door.

As he did so there came a roar which seemed to split the heavens, and the shack, wrenched from its frail supports as though by a giant's hand, trembled for a brief instant on the brink of the cliff and then toppled bodily into the sea.

Jean Avegno Rids the Forest of Saloniki of the Death Which Had Struck Terror to the Hearts of the Woodchoppers and Soldiers.

IT WAS on the outskirts of Saloniki, where the allied forces had burrowed deep into the earth and constructed a series of trenches, protected by entanglements of barbed wire, far more formidable than the lines in Northern France. In front lay the vast plain of Vardar with its fertile fields, and further back the wooded slopes and wild forests.

There was time to choose the location of the trenches in this instance, and the engineers who constructed them had the benefit of the lessons learned in the previous eighteen months' trench warfare, and they took full advantage of these lessons. If ever the campaign of Saloniki becomes a part of the history of the present European madness it will form an interesting chapter.

In other places where the actual fighting has taken place neither side had time to select the location of their trenches. They had to excavate where they happened to be at the time they were stopped. In the case of the Saloniki defenses, there was time to use all the latest improvements in trenches and entanglements. To those who constructed them so carefully and painstakingly it will probably seem a pity if they are never under fire. It would be something similar to the case of the lady who had her doors and windows equipped with a. the latest and most up-to-date burglar alarms and then was disappointed that no burglar ever tried to get in.

But out there, somewhere in the dim forest across the plain, where French detachments were on scout duty, there was a something which did not appear to be frightened by the invasion of the West Europe troops. What was it?

When the allies first landed in Saloniki and detachments of troops scoured the forest they heard of this something. "The death in the forest," said a woodchopper who lived on the edge of the stretch of woods. He was an old man, but he was still strong and he always carried a huge knife in his belt.

No, he had never seen the mysterious one himself. He never went far in the forest alone, and no one could approach his hut in a clearing without being seen first. But once, when he and John Garnipoulas had gone into the woods together, they had come across a mangled human shape, lying there on the ground. It was a fellow-woodchopper who was to have helped them at their work that day. Every bone in his body was crushed.

But why? Who could tell? It was the mysterious death in the forest. No one dare venture into those depths alone, because the death was abroad, and the old woodchopper told of other broken bodies found occasionally.

The French lieutenant laughed and shrugged his shoulders and then he and his troop rode on into the depths of the forest. That night they made camp and along about midnight when the watch was changed one of the sentries was found with every bone in his body broken.

"If we rid these woods of this death in the forest we will have accomplished something."

thought Private Jean Avegno, who was one of the first to reach the mangled mass of flesh and bones, which a brief time before had been a man and a soldier of France. Thereafter precautions were taken against the creature or whatever it was. But nothing came out of it.

After several weeks in the forest the French detachment was relieved and returned to the barracks on the outskirts of Saloniki. By this time probably every man in the allied army had heard of the mysterious creature, for another soldier who one day wandered a little way from camp did not return, and when a search was made for him next day, his body was found.

Then, again Avegno's troop was sent out into the forest, and as they rode along they discussed the mysterious thing. Avegno was a quiet youngster, fresh from a farm in Picardy. He had once lived in Paris for a few months and had aspired to become a wrestler, but he finally returned to the farm, having met with but little encouragement from the opponents he had met in wrestling shows in the Montmarte section. And then the war came.

Now, Walter, the sentry slain that night, had been Avegno's pal, and Jean had silently vowed that he would yet ferret out the mystery of the death, but had said nothing to any of his He had never known fear in his life, not even when the shells of the "Eoches" had fallen thick in the trench in which he was a year or more before, back there at home. And he did not fear any terror the forest held in store for him. He had a pistol and in his belt a knife in a sheath.

As he strolled along the heard a solemn chant- companions. He was bright, jolly and always ready for any kind of frolic, as they all were, and yet he never forgot Walter's death.

He was on guard duty the first night of their return to the forest and once he wandered some little distance away from his fellow-sentry. It was dark there in the depths of the forest, and the moon, which was shining brightly, hardly penetrated anywhere. It was all shadows and then deeper shadows. But as Jean finally stopped by a tree he thought he saw a shadow, one of the deeper shadows, move, and none of the shadows there had any right to move, for it was a calm, cool night, with not a breath of air stirring. He watched and the shadow stopped about 50 feet away.

But at this moment Victor, his fellow-guard, called sharply to him. Jean darted forward to where the shadow had stopped, but it seemed to him to melt away, and when he reached the spot there was nothing but the black shades of the overhanging trees.

He said nothing, but next day, it was a Sunday, early in the morning, when he was off duty, he sauntered casually outside the lines of the encampment and plunged into the woods. ing, and, turning in that direction, soon came to a rude Greek chapel, where a priest was saying holy mass. There was little to the chapel save a roof, the rude pillars of which held this up were wreathed with vines and foliage. A score or more of French soldiers, drawn by curiosity, were in the throng of worshipers. Jean crossed himself reverently and stopped a few moments. It was a very solemn and impressive service, there in the depths of the forest, but he did not linger long.

He wandered into the forest for a distance of half a mile, whistling merrily, but keeping his eyes open and listening to every sound. But he neither saw nor heard anything, and finally he halted beneath the low branches of a tree and looked about him.

"I wonder——," he thought. There was the slightest rustle in the foliage above him and something dropped from the thick branches onto him. As he crashed to the ground he tried to reach for his knife, but a strong pair of arms was clasped about him and as he struggled on the ground and tried to break their hold the clasp seemed to be growing tighter. But Jean remembered his old wrestling tricks and suddenly he raised his knee, pushed heavily against the body, and as the clasp loosened he twisted himself and broke free. Both sprang to their feet, each with a hand on the other's throat. And Jean gazed into one of the most demoniacal pair of eyes he had ever seen. The creature, it could hardly be called a man, was but partly clothed, and its face was covered with a heavy beard. But there was little time for observation, for, before Jean could reach for his knife, the other threw himself upon him. But Jean was cautious, and he did not give a chance for those strong arms to pinion his own at his side again. He kept himself free from them. Back and forth they struggled, and then crashed to the ground again.

Finding he could not pinion his enemy's arms the creature grasped him by the throat, and for a few seconds—it seemed hours—Jean saw only red and blue and crimson, and then he thought of poor Walter, and with a mighty effort he struck the other full in the pit of the stomach with his knee. The creature loosed his hold and fell back, then sprang at his foe once more, while the latter was struggling to his knees. Instantly Jean's knife flashed from its sheath and he struck.

It was nearly two hours later when he staggered into camp, with two ribs broken, and his clothes half torn from his body. When he had been revived sufficiently he led several of his companions to the spot. The creature was still alive and he was taken to camp, where the stab wound in the breast was treated. It was discovered that his tongue had been cut off and his body was found to be literally covered with welts and bruises. Later he was sent to a near-by village, and his identity was established by his daughter. He had been a woodchopper, and at the outbreak of the last Turko-Grecian war had joined the colors. He took part in an engagement, in which he was captured and he was never heard of again.

It was believed that he had been held as a slave by the Turks, had been mistreated, and, finally, insane from the hardships he had suffered, escaped and returned to the scene of his former life.

But on his dying bed he did not recognise his daughter and no light of reason illumined the dull eyes of the maniac.

It was the day after they returned to Saloniki and Jean was walking, fully recovered from the effects of his battle in the forest, was sitting in front of a cafe on one of the public squares, drinking with several comrades, when he saw his own lieutenant crossing the square to where the general in charge of the French troops was standing, looking over a paper which had just been handed him. The lieutenant approached the general, and Jean saw them talking. Then the two walked toward the little group of privates, who sprang to their feet and saluted. The lieutenant stopped in front of them and called Jean's name. The latter stepped forward.

"My son," said the general, kindly, "I wish to compliment you on your brave deed. At a more fitting time you will be thanked again, but I am glad that you have rid us of an enemy, and what is worse, a terror." And, saluting, he walked on with the lieutenant.

ALTHOUGH it has been many months since the bombardment of Antwerp, little is known of the fate of the art treasures which were housed there, especially some of the wonderful works of Rubens.

The greatest of these, and the one best known to the tourist and to hundreds of thousands of others, through reproductions, is the "Descent from the Cross," which was in the south transept of the magnificent cathedral. In the north transept was the painter's "Elevation of the Cross."

In the "Descent," the white linen on which the body of the Savior lies forms the keynote of the entire picture. The utter inertness of a dead body is expressively depicted in the figure, and art critics declare that it is in this work that Ruben's genius is exhibited in its best light.

"The Elevation of the Cross," although inferior and less known than the other painting, is a wonderful work, in which the natural attitudes of the various figures is remarkable. Rubens displays his thorough knowledge of anatomy in this and the coloring is rich and harmonious.

The high altar piece of the choir is an "Assumption," by Rubens, while he also has a "Resurrection" in one of the chapels. Other notable paintings in the cathedrals were: "Last Judgment," by J. de Backer; portraits of the Plantin family, by B. Sammeling; portrait of Chris. Plantin, the painter, by W. J. Herryns; "Mater Dolorosa and Group," by A. Quellen, the elder; "Death of the Virgin," by Abr. Matthys; "Marriage of the Virgin," "The Annunciation" and "The Visitation," by M. I. van Bree, and "The Virgin with St. Luke," by A. de Vriendt. Besides these were hundreds of carven pieces by the master artists of the past four centuries and some magnificent stained-glass windows. The Town Hall also contained numerous paintings by the old masters, besides notable examples of wood carving.

The Church of St. Jacques was also rich in art treasures, including paintings, carved wood and marble and stained-glass windows.

In the Royal Museum of Fine Arts were collections of Rubins and Van Dyck paintings, besides many works from the brushes of other Dutch masters and a considerable variety of statuary. "The Christ Crucified Between Two Thieves" was another fine example of Rubens in the Royal Museum. It represents Longinus, the Roman officer, mounted on a gray horse, piercing the side of the Savior with a lance. The penitent thief is invoking the Savior, while in the foreground, to one side, is the Virgin Mother, whom the wife of Cleophas is endeavoring to console. Mary Magdalene, on her knees before the cross, is imploring the Roman officer to have mercy. Other scriptural works of Rubens here are: "The Prodigal Sun Feeding Upon Husks," "The Virgin Instructed by St. Anne," "The Adoration of the Magi," "The Souls in Purgatory," and "The Holy Trinity."

Van Dyck's "Entombment," in this museum, is well known all over the world through the many copies made of it. The Virgin is represented supporting the head of the dead Christ on her knees, while St. John shows the wound made by the nail in the left hand to two angels, one of whom veils his face.

There are, or were, hundreds of these wonderful paintings in Amsterdam. Were they destroyed or not?

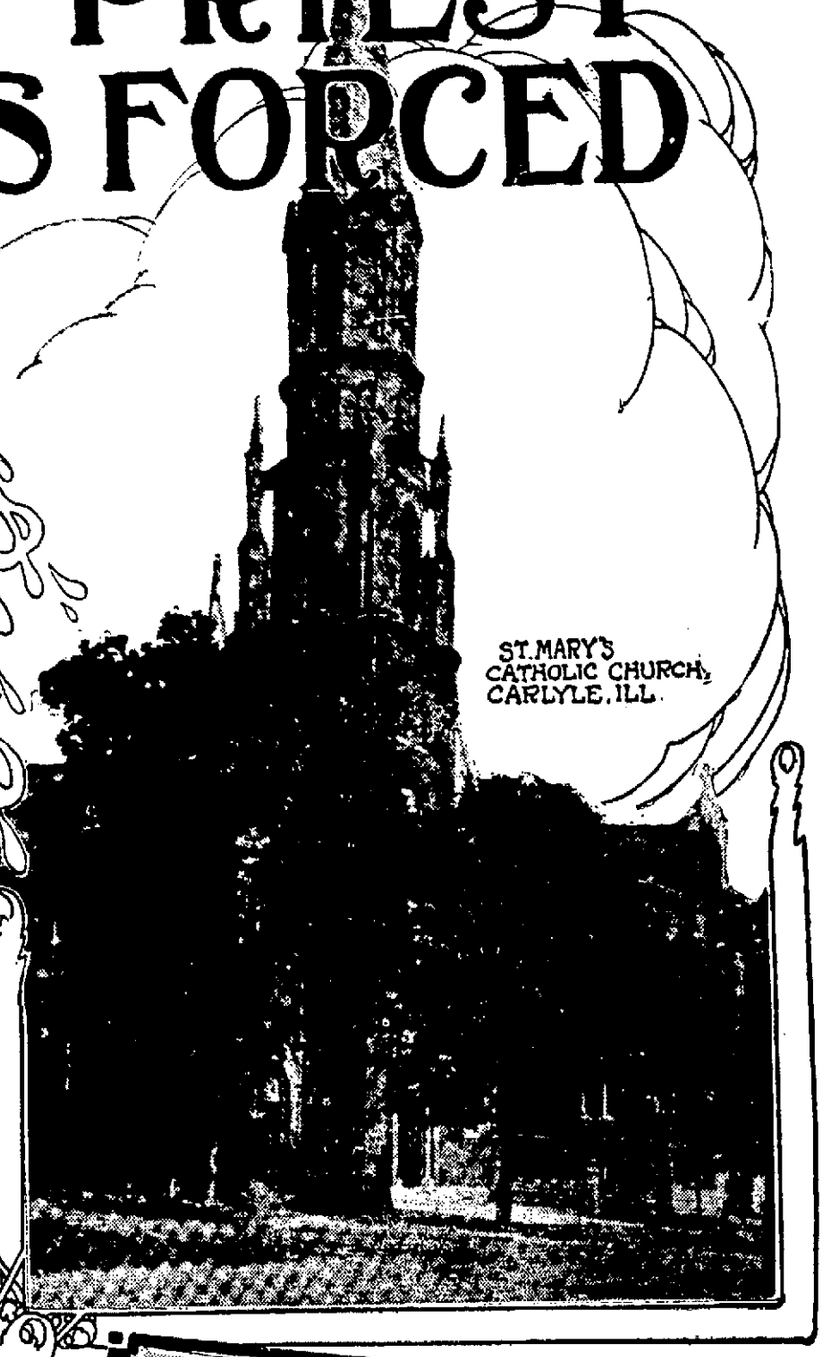
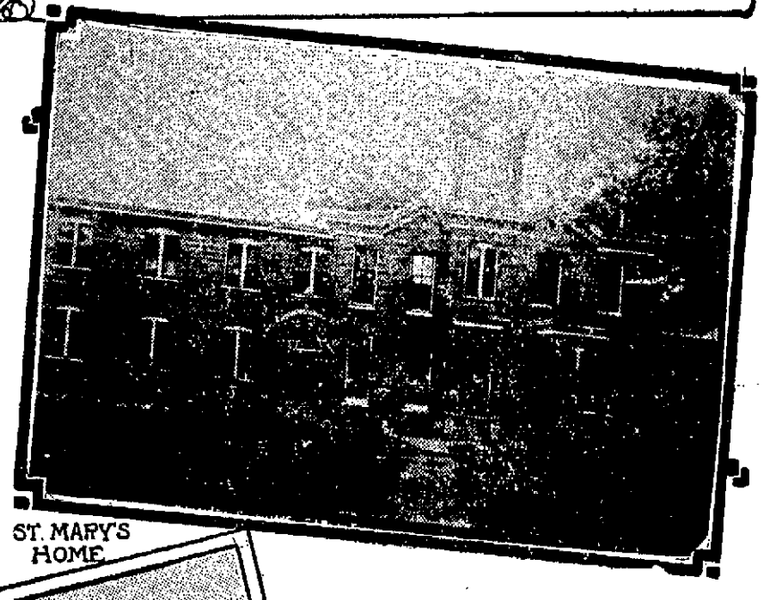
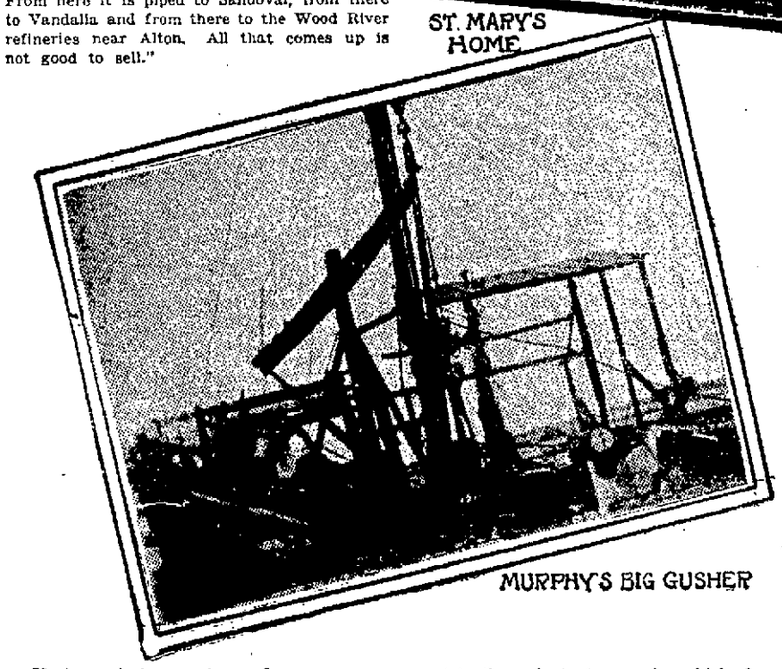
REV. FR. J.B DIEPENBROCK



ST. MARY'S CATHOLIC CHURCH, CARLYLE, ILL.



ST. MARY'S HOME.



MURPHY'S BIG GUSHER

BY ROSE MARION BOYLAN.

REV. FATHER J. B. DIEPENBROCK, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church in Carlyle, Clinton County, Ill., is enjoying, with his parish, a steady flow of dollars from oil on a farm he was forced to buy when he did not have the money to spare.

Many are the lives that have been changed by the oil boom of five years ago in Carlyle, but Father Diepenbrock goes on much the same as ever, except he now has more means with which to carry on his work as pastor. His church is one of the handsomest in the diocese of Belleville.

Father Diepenbrock, who was born in Germany but ordained in America as was his brother, who is pastor of a church in a Missouri parish near Jefferson city, went to Carlyle from Cairo, Ill., before the cyclone of 1905. He succeeded Rev. Father Anton Deninger, who had been the pastor there for thirty years. The cyclone destroyed all the churches of Carlyle, including St. Mary's, but none of the saloons. Kindly it left the school of the parish.

Carlyle men say they never saw a more gloom stricken person than Father Diepenbrock the day after the cyclone. It was his duty to rebuild his church. He knew that many of his parishioners were farmers and that their crops had not been good for years. He took up his task without grumbling but Father Diepenbrock was subjected to a trial that he hopes will not be his again. The story goes like this:

One afternoon in 1910, Father Diepenbrock and a member of his parish drove out into the country to visit parishioners. They arrived at the farm of Clement Schwierjohann, where lived the son of the owner and his wife. Father Diepenbrock noticed that the young wife seemed ill at ease. Although she tried to be courteous, she seemed deeply worried and could not take much interest in the conversation.

At last he asked her the cause of her worry. She replied: "We shall have to move, father. Clement's parents have sold this home and we can stay here no longer."

Having told her story she could not keep from weeping. She explained, whenever her tears would let her, that she liked the place and did not wish to find a new home.

Father Diepenbrock is a sympathetic man and understanding the regret with which women leave the places where they have been happy, the houses which they entered as brides, where their children were born and where they have nursed them in happy and sad times, he began to ask questions about the sale. Many a time and oft in the days that came he wished that he had not been solicitous.

Young Mrs. Schwierjohann explained that a farmer from St. Rose township wished to buy the land and had already entered into an agreement with her husband's father.

"How much will he pay for it?" asked Father Diepenbrock.

Mrs. Schwierjohann named the price.

"That isn't enough," said the priest. "Thi is a good farm and is worth more than that. Why even I," he continued jokingly, "would give more than that for it."

Owner Visits Priest.

Mrs. Schwierjohann seemed soothed by the interest of her guests and not long afterward they departed for Carlyle.

A few days later Clement Schwierjohann, the owner of the farm, rang the door bell of Father Diepenbrock's residence, which is one of the residences of Carlyle which has marked individuality. It was as far back from the street as the length of the large church. To its porch leads a walk of red flagging. At this season of the year a great bed of tulips is in bloom on one side of the yard. On the other is a large grotto in which is a prie-dieu, statues of the Blessed Virgin, and vases of flowers.

At one end of the house is a greenhouse. Vines grow about the home and in the windows are white curtains trimmed with crocheted lace. Miss Catherine Diepenbrock, a sister of the priest, is his housekeeper. His assistant, Rev. Father Dietrick, who has been stationed in Carlyle for a quarter of a century, resides with him.

Father Diepenbrock welcomed Clement Schwierjohann but was surprised when that man said:

"My deed!" exclaimed the priest. "My deed to what?"

"Your deed to my farm," continued the other. "You said you would give more for my farm than that man from St. Rose, so I canceled my agreement with him and have had the deed made out to you."

Father Diepenbrock examined the deed and found that all was as Schwierjohann had said.

Those were not happy days for the priest, who was in his 59th year. He did not tell even his closest friends about the affair, but worried about it in silence. At last he conferred with Frederick Schlafly, president of the First National Bank of Carlyle. He told Schlafly that he wished to borrow some money. Schlafly replied, "All right."

That was before the days of the oil boom. In those big oil days the officers of the bank had to act unsurprised when men asked them to cash checks for $50,000. But that time was in the future, and Schlafly was somewhat surprised when the loan asked for was $9700. He had no question about lending that amount to Father Diepenbrock, but loans of that size were not everyday occurrences.

When the requested few days were over and Schwierjohann visited the priest's house again the money was ready for him. He turned over the deed and shortly after removed to Mississippi, where he has since died.

Less than six months after the farm became the priest's oil was found in the neighborhood, and Father Diepenbrock's farm was among those leased by a company that paid one-eighth of the receipts to the owner. In less than a year Father Diepenbrock had paid his loan from the bank and was receiving a steady income from his wells. Conservative men say that his average receipts have been $500 a month since the discovery of oil five years ago. At times it has been greater than this, and at other times less.

Handsome Church Built.

St. Mary's handsome church has been completed, and men of the parish say that no one knows just how much it cost. Father Diepenbrock has never mentioned how much of his money has been paid for the beautification of the house of God, but men who know values in church property say that it has been no inconsiderable amount.

In the church is a beautiful stained-glass window dedicated to the memory of his parents. The motif of the window is the Visitation. The Blessed Virgin is shown arriving at the home of St. Elizabeth. Near the door is the aged father of St. John. But for this window no credit is given the priest. Beneath the picture in glass are these words, "In memory of the parents of Catherine Diepenbrock."

Carlyle men say that Father Diepenbrock has not hoarded his income, but has given gladly of it to charities. One of his beneficiaries is St. John's Orphanage, Glen Addie, near Belleville, Ill. This is the home where the orphans of his parish are cared for by the sisters known as the Poor Handmaidens of Christ.

Old Home Good Enough.

The largest amount from the oil fields was realized and is continuing to be realized by Leo Deters when one excepts the men from other cities. Deters' farm continues to contribute barrels of oil by night and day to the receiving tanks with the exception of Sundays. Some rule in the agreement with the oil companies gives even automatic oil pumps a day of rest.

Deters resides in the last house on that street of Carlyle which leads towards the oil country. It was a large house before he became wealthy. He neither tore it down nor bought another one. His old house was good enough for him. He had it repaired and repainted. He bought an automobile. That's a rule in the oil country. When the oil begins to run in paying amounts the landowners buy machines. Just outside of Carlyle is a mile of state road that makes spinning a delight.

The Deters' country home is in charge of his son-in-law, Frank Ortman, who cares for one of the pump houses on the farm. Ortman is proud of the way his gas engine runs. The oil has also given the farms natural gas for heating and lighting purposes.

"We haven't had a lamp in our house for five years," said Ortman, as he showed just how big a blaze the gas in his furnace can make. This engine runs the "merry-go-round" in the pump house, a wheel placed laterally which controls fourteen pumps. The pumps are scattered about the field in a fashion that seems careless to one who knows little about the varying performances of oil. From each well there is a rod that connects with the wheel in the pump house and to stand at the pump house and watch the automatic working of these rods that radiate from the pump house is a certain kind of amusement.

In broad daylight it is, but men who live in the oil country and do not own wells say that it is weird to be driving about in the night and hear that constant "chug-chug" of the pumps, the rods and the gas engines.

On still nights, and most nights are still ones in that section of Clinton County, the working of this machinery, which continues while men sleep, can be heard three miles away in Carlyle.

Should a pumpstation stop, so accustomed are the families, who reside near them, to the constant sound of the machinery, its very cessation causes them to waken.

Should a break occur at night there would be no further injury to the machinery and no waste of oil. Only a delay in the pumping of oil that means money.

Near the pumphouse that Ortman minds there is an oil tank into which the oil from the pumps flows. One has to climb a ladder to see the streams of water and oil flowing up and then into the tank. The water always comes up when the oil does. The water is made to flow away into a pond that each pumphouse must possess. In the beginning the oily water was allowed to run away as it pleased and it flowed into streams and ponds of fresh water and it is said that it caused the death of fish, and for that reason state rules prohibiting this practice were enforced.

This oil water is destructive to vegetation and gives out an odor that is especially noticeable when the sun shines hot or when there is an extra amount of humidity. There are those who say they can smell the oil all the way to Carlyle, but most of them have no wells of their own. Men interested in oil say that odor is from the gas burned.

Ortman washed his hands in the oil of the tank and they came out with a brownish color but little odor. He said, "This oil has to travel a long way before it's fit to be used. From here it is piped to Sandoval, from there to Vandalia and from there to the Wood River refineries near Alton. All that comes up is not good to sell."

He is no fortune seeker and never was one. Some one joked him about marrying into the family of the man to whom the oil gave more than any one else. Then the joker, who was fair minded, corrected himself with, "But you were married before the oil came." Ortman agreed that he was. He was a farmer before the oil find. All through the busy period he teamed for the oil men. Teaming was worth $5 a day then, which was more money than one could get out of the overworked farms.

Oil Money Brings Music.

Later Ortman took charge of the pumping station for his father-in-law, having learned its management while working in the field. He keeps the pumphouse, which has a granitoid floor, as clean as a Clinton County kitchen, and is as proud of his gas engine as a bride would be of an electric stove. He and his family live in the big brick Deters farmhouse and the children go to school eight months in the year.

In response to the question, "Does it feel just as good to make oil come into tanks as it does to plant and raise corn?" Ortman replied, "Just as good," and there was implication that it was a great deal more interesting financially.

The oil money has brought other music to Clinton County than that "chug-chug" of the rods and pumps which, however, is said to be the sweetest kind of music to the well owners.

In many homes are player pianos that cost as much as $500, while in others there are expensive phonographs and some real instruments for the children who were young enough to learn music when the good times came in.

They say that it is almost amusing to watch the reluctant way in which farmers sign leases and to listen to them when they tell of sleepless nights in which they worry about farms desecrated by holes in the ground. The real fun, however, comes when oil is found near their farms, and to use the language of a man who knows how much talking one has to do in order to secure a lease, "When oil is found on the next farm, then that same man who worried so much about the damage that would be done his old farm, will want the prospectors to sink a well right by his front porch, even if the famly has to go out the back way the rest of their lives. He wouldn't mind having a well in his kitchen if only it would bring in the money."

Some men, who have productive wells, have not left their farms or their farming. Since the wells interfere with farming to a certain extent, it being impossible to cultivate the district about a well because of the interference of the rods, many of the farmers have gone to raising stock, especially cows. Other farmers, without wells, have done likewise and the dairy business is good around Carlyle. Meanwhile the farm ground is having a needed vacation.

Here's the way they tell it to strangers: "One day a man named Frank Ranger came to town. He was an oil prospector and he was so near broke that he couldn't pay for his board after he'd been here for two weeks. He went out into the country looking for leases. When you get a lease from a farmer it is usual to offer him one-eighth of the returns of his oil if oil is found. A small amount is paid to hold the lease. When he had gotten a block of leases he found a man with the necessary machinery who was willing to take a chance. Get money if there was oil. Get nothing if there was none.

"His man with the machinery went to work on the Smith farm, owned by Mrs. Maria Smith. They set up a rig and put in the iron piece that pounds the ground and the rock until it reaches the depth necessary to find oil.

"All this buying leases brought other prospectors to town and a rig was set upon the Murphy farm. The big flow came to Laird first, the man who was behind the prospecting on the Murphy farm. But oil had already been found on the farm of Mrs. Maria Smith in good sized quantities.

"As soon as the news went out, Carlyle changed from a county seat to an imitation of Broadway and Nome, Alaska, combined. Such crowds came to Carlyle that they couldn't walk on the sidewalk, they walked in the street and it was crowded all the time. You couldn't get into a saloon. The lunch counters sold sandwiches and coffee all day and part of the night. The Truesdail Hotel was so crowded that you couldn't move in the lobby. The banks kept open from 7 in the morning until 6 o'clock at night and the bankers are tired yet when they talk about how hard they worked.

"It got so that we quit speaking to people on the street. We had always spoken to everybody, because we knew everybody, but there were so many strangers that it seemed strange to see home folks.

"Money was carried around in bundles and suit cases. In most instances it was impossible to deal with farmers, especially after the oil began to flow, without real money.

Some Hold Out Too Long.

"Some men made the mistake of holding out too long. That happened to the Deters' school district. The prospectors wanted a plot in the school yard and they made an offer to the school directors. The directors wanted more but before the prospectors agreed to their terms the plot was no longer desired and the district lost its chance.

The County Farm was more fortunate. Its bit was $12,000. St. Mary's Home for the Aged is not even on the oil side of Carlyle, but the oil find is said to have been a good thing for its funds. Wealthy men who came to Carlyle and made more money remembered to give some of it to the home where the old are ending their lives.

"Ranger came to this town, as I said, almost broke. He found oil, and when he went away he owned $300,000 and three automobiles. I have heard since that he has lost everything. His wife asked for and was given a divorce. Then he married his stenographer. She was with him when he was in Carlyle."

We hate like everythink to polloot the collums of a clean respecktable newspaper like the Bingville Bugle with enythink that has ever been printed in that pusilanimus & ignominious rag of a sheet knowd as the Hardscrabble Banner but there dont seem to be no way to git outen it in this instants so read the follering whitch is copied from the Banner of last wk:

"Mr. William A. Simpson, wife and five childern, have took up their residence amongs us and will make Hardscrabble their home in the fuchure. The Simpson family moved here from Bingville where they lived for the past three years. Mr. Simpson in a interview with the Editor of the Banner stated that he was rejoiced to get away from such a 1-horse town as Bingville where there aint enny opportoonities for a man of genius to make a living being as Bingville is dead in the shell and its inhabitants a lot of narrer minded old fogies. Mr. Simpson has stopped taking the Bingville Bugle whitch he says aint fit to read ennyhow, and has subscribed for the Banner. We welcome Mr. Simpson and family to our midst."

When we 1st read the above in the Hardscrabble Banner we considerd that being as it was wrote by a human wart on the fase of nachure it was beneath our notis and desided that we would treat it with silent contemt, but the more we tride to treat it with silent contemt the madder we got so we take our vitriolick pen in hand to anser it.

Hardscrabble is welcome to William A. Simpson, wife and five childern. We aint got nothink aginst Mrs. Simpson and the childern—Mrs. Simpson is a mighty sight too good for her husband and allus was—in our opinyun her little finger is wuth moren a duzzen Bill Simpsonses. (Speshial Notis—We nevver cald him "William A. Simpson" in Bingville—we allus cald him "Bill" and other names that aint fit to print.)

We notis that Bill Simpson tells the Hardscrabble Banner editor that he is rejoiced to git away from Bingville. If Bill is enney more rejoiced to git away from Bingville than Bingville is to have him depart, then Bill must be almost to happy for utterents. Bill says there aint no opportoonities for his genius in Bingville. About the only genius Bill manifested during the two yrs he lived in Bingville was for loafin in the shade durin the day and lootin hen roosts at night while decent folks was asleep. While Bill was in our midst it wassent safe for a hen to go to sleep at nites and sinst he has disapeard folks can git up in the morning knowing that when they count their chickens there wont be none missing. If there aint a decrease in the hen populashion of Hardscrabble from now on well we miss our guess.

We note what Bill said about stoppin the Bingville Buggle becuz it wassent fit to read and subscribin for the Hardscrabble Banner. Our books shows us that Bill peard to think that the Bugle was fit to read during the three yrs he lived here being as it was sent to him prompt evry wk and being as he stopped his paper without paying us a red ct on his back subscripshion. Now he says it aint fit to read. We should think that most enny kind of a newspaper that diddent cost a person ennythink would be fit to read. If Bill Simpson cals the Hardscrabble Banner fit to read we dont consider him mutch of a judge of good litterchoor that's all.

We repeat that Hardscrabble is welcome to Bill Simpson and as far as Bingville is concernd him leaving here was a good riddants of bad rubbish.

Lokal Items

As we go to press with this ishue of the Bugle we observe that it is quite warmish. In other words a person perspires very freely without makin mutch effort to do so. Hank Dewberry he says let them swet who wants to as for him hell stick to the shade and wont moove unless it does.

There was a shower last Sunday but there wassent enuff rain fell to even lay the dust. It clouded up like everythink and lookd as if it was agoing to pour, then the rain peterd out. We dont like to be misled in this ridicklus manner.

Miss Milly Underwood whilst sitting very quiet amongs the other members of the quoir at church last Sabbath morning had a mouse to run acrost her foot and Milly gives a awful screech jest at the most sollum porshion of Rev. Moores sermon. The other girls in the quoir diddent get a glimpst of the mouse or they would of probably screeched also.

Bige Barker was complainin down to Hen Weathersbys store last night becuz the potater bugs gnaws off his potater tops as fast as they sprout. Bige says he calkilates the bugs set there waitin for the tops to shoot outen the ground. Bige purchased some pizen at the store and says hes goin to sprinkle his potater tops with it and see how the potater bugs likes that for a change of diet.

Lime Peterson cleaned out his well last wk and found one of his old rubber boots in the bottom of it along with consderable other rubbish. Lime says its all clear to him now why the water from that well has tasted so pecooliar in the past being as it diddent taste nacheral. Lime says he aint no idee how that rubber boot got into the well.

Hez Underwood while chopping wood last wk tride to chop through a knot into a tree but what Hez thort was a knot prooved to be a stone whitch in some manner the tree had growd around. Hez says you ort to of saw the sparks fly when he hit that stone with the sharp edge of his axe. The axe was ruind.

Although we have kept purty close watch we aint notised enny persons subscribing for the Bugle recent. Unless we can manage to git a few new subscribers who will pay cash strickly in advance in the not fur distant fuchure we may have to close up shop or go into bankrupsy.

"Lokal Squibs" aint what you might call very profuse in our midst this wk. Either that or else some "Lokal Squibs" has happend that we aint happend to hear of. Anyone hearing of any "Lokal Squibs" at any time kindly advise us of same.

Old Anse Smiley had a curius thing to happen to him last Tuesday night about 8 p. m. whilst he was removing his boots from his feet perparatory to retiring for the night.

In order to remoove his boots in the manner to whitch he had been accustomd Anse used his bootjack whitch he has used for this purpose for the past 20 yrs. Anse put his right boot in the bootjack and heaved back but instid of the boot comin off the bootjack split right down the middle and Anse went heels over head into the open fire place and butted his head agin the bricks with great vilence.

Anse had been workin out in the wet most of the day and his boots had shrunk up on him. As a result he couldnt get em off nohow even with his wifes assistants and at last he went to bed with em on in disgust and diddent git em offen his feet until the follering evg after they had expanded suffishent.

Pertynent Personalsties

Sime Winslow has a bealing in his ear. Well, Sime is welcome to it. As edditor we onct had a bealing in our ear and speaking from personal experients we are satisfide to let Sime have it than have it ourself.

Enos McCrackens old cow "Spot" wanderd through the front gate of Widder Skinner residence and trampt up her pansy bed afore the Widder could drive her out agin. Why dont Enos keep his cows up instid of permittin em to wander around loose a menace to gardens and pansy beds?

Hank Dewberry while baiting his hook in a hurry over to Gootchic Pond last Sunday where he was fishin after havin a big fish skin all the bait offen his hook axidentally run the hook into his thum and had a turrible time getting it out. By the time Hank got his hook rebaited the fish was probly at the other end of the pond. His thum was all Hank ketchd during the day.

Miss Phoebe Hilderbrand our fashionable dressmaker & seemstress wishes to a nounce that she has jest recd a catalog of fall latest styles to be wore next fall & is perpared to show same to the alect of Bingville who contemplates having new dresses made.

Eph Higgins our accommodating p. m. says that the dating stamp whitch he uses to date the letters whitch is mailed at the Bingville P. O. has been hammerd so mutch that it is wore down until a person couldn't tell whether the letter was mailed at Bingville or where. Eph says he has wrote the Guvverment in a polite manner twict askin for a new dating stamp but aint heerd from em yet and unless he does hell write the P. M. general a sharp letter that hell bet will wake em up at Washington.

Lem Brown our expert carpenter while planing off a board in his carpenter shop tother day planed off a slice of his thum whitch bled like everything. Lem says in justice to the plane hell haft to say that the blade of it was sharp as a razzer.

Old Dad Henderson says he dont know as he can stand it to go without a haircut until fall being as during this hot wether his long crop of hair keeps his head awful hot and gives him a headake, but Dad says if he can only hold out until cooler wether then he can hold out until next spring. Dad says that all he has paid out for haircuts during the past five yrs is $1.25. Twict his wife cut his hair for him and that was clear gain.

Heck Smoked Out

Heck Winslow one of our most respeckted cittizens come down town tother morning after breakfast with his eyes red & wortering and when we askd Heck if he had a cold he told us no it wassent that.

It seems the night before when Heck went to retire he raised the winder of his room whitch had been kep down to keep the muskeeters out to let in a leetle fresh air and while the fresh air was comin in a swarm of muskeeters enterd also and after Heck had put down the winder and composed hisself for sleep as we might say the muskeeters begin to work on him & bit & pesterd him to sitch a extent that he finally got up and got a old tin pail and burnt a smudge in the room whitch was so full of smoke that Heck set on the edge of the bed haff the night nearly coffin his fool head offen his shoulders and then and his eyes smartin and finally he went out to the barn and slep in the hay until daylight.

Bud he found a old fish hook somewheres so he tied it onto the end of a long peece of twine and on the fish hook he put a grain of corn.

Then Bud he dropd the hook with the grain of corn on it out in the back yard and hid behint a rose bush at tother end of the string. Bye and bye Hinckleys old dominecker rooster come along and soon as he seen that grain of corn he nacherly grabd it not havink sense enuff to know that there was a fish hook conneckted with it.

Soon as the rooster tuk the hook with the corn on it into his mouth Bud give a yank on the string to set the hook and then the fun begin. The rooster puld and hauld and flapped his wings and skwawked while Bud jumpd out from behint the rosebush and begin to drag the rooster tords him by broot force if necessary. All the time Bud kept hollerin and laffin, "Ive ketchd a big fish this time!"

Soon as Buds mother heerd the commoshion she run out into the yard and ketchd the rooster and after a spell sucksceded in gettin the hook outen his mouth after whitch she let him go. Then Mrs. Hinckley procured a shingle and conduckted Bud into the woodshed shutting the door behint them. Judging from the wails and groans and moans and yells whitch emenated from the woodshed and could be heerd all over Bingville we persoom Mrs. Hinckley chastized her son considerable.

Mrs. Hillyer was engaged in making a kettle full of lye soap for domestick purposes and while she was biling same out in the yard blamed if the kettle diddent upset without enny warning and spild evry mite of the soap in it. This was a awful blow to Mrs. Hillyer who has the sympathy of the entire communitty in her sad bereavement concerning her loss of the sope.

Notis!

We regret to state that their aint no "Country Correspondence" in this ishue of the Bugle. We persoom the reason for this consists largely of the fact that no country correspondence has been received and hope this will be regarded as a suffishent reason by our subscribers.

The reason we call attenshion here that there aint no "Country Correspondence" in this ishue of the Bugle is because if we diddent do so you might not notice their absents.

As a general rule there is a few news items from some adjining settlement in the Bugle evry wk but this wk is a excepshion to the general rule. Praps the reason we aint heerd from enny of our correspondents whitch writes items for the Bugle from towns & villages hereabouts is that their too bizzy to write, or praps its too hot to write or praps they have some other excoose jest as good. Be that as it may the fackt remains that we aint heerd from none of em. but by next wk we hope to have a hole batch of "Country Correspondence" to print in the Bugle so have pashients until next wk or the wk after.

P. S.—Jest as we go to press we have recd several items from our correspondent at Pea Ridge but theyre too late for publicashion in this ishue. On the other hand we have read over these items and there aint ennythink of enny importance amongs em ennyhow.

Chicago, July 1.—Absence of selling pressure resulted today in a decided upturn in quotations on wheat. Bulls were encouraged by Liverpool advices that the European demand for the new American crop had improved and was continuing to broaden.

Opening prices, which ranged from ⅜c off to ¼c up, with July at $1.01 to $1.01⅛, and September at $1.04⅝ to $1.04¾, were followed by a material advance all around.

Corn rose owing to a lack of deliveries and to the lightness of offerings. After opening at ⅜c decline to ¼c advance, the market made moderate general gains.

Sympathy with the strength of other grain hardened oats. Buying, however, was only scattered.

Higher prices on hogs gave firmness to provisions. Deliveries of lard were heavy but went into the hands of packers and other big interests.

PICTURES WHAT HIS SOUL WENT THROUGH

On his bed, in the base hospital at Columbus, N. M., Sam H. Harris, one of the tragically few American survivors of the massacre of Carrizal, consented to write the account of his experience during this historic battle in northern Mexico for the correspondent of this newspaper. The official reports of this battle have been very meager—what really happened to the brave soldiers of the Tenth cavalry, and how they met their fates, has not yet been told. This story by Trooper Harris is the first and only real document to describe this.—Editor.

By SAM H. HARRIS.

Columbus, N. M., July 1.—I am going to carry the memory of the fight at Carrizal with me as long as I live, and I reckon that will be some time because the wound in my shoulder is getting along fine now. It doesn't make any difference what I do or what I try to think about, I am always seeing the awful fight at Carrizal—but not the way it has been written about in the newspapers.

I may not be able to write about Carrizal that way or the way that battles were described in the red history book I used to study in Elizabethtown, back in Kentucky, where I came from. But I will try to tell you here what it is actually to live through a fight in which you know that the chances are ten to one that your death is only a matter of a few minutes.

Death—that is what you want to happen to the dirty devils that are all around you—so it won't happen to you.

There wasn't one of us who was thinking about death that day when we rode in column fours toward Carrizal, and then all of a sudden there it was—death right out in front of us!

For a short time death wasn't behind us.

But not a man attempted to get away by the one route left open. Why, the way those boys stood up and faced death from hundreds of rifles and a machine gun that poured out bullets faster than all the rifles in Carrizal was wonderful. If the folks in heaven can see what we are doing down here, I know that Abe Lincoln was proud of all those boys and the way they fought for the country he did so much for.

Every time I think of the battle it seems strange to me that all the men were not excited. It was the horses that lost their heads. I know that only too well, for the position I was assigned to was holding horses. If you ever tried to hold a scary horse by the head when an automobile is going past, you will have just the beginning of an idea of what it was to held eight horses under fire for the first time.

I owe a lot to my horse, for he saved me from those treacherous Mexicans, although at first he caused me so much trouble that I couldn't put him on the line with the other horses.

I was busy taking care of the horses most of the time, but I did a lot of thinking, and I remember it just as well as if the fight had only taken place a few minutes ago.

I was saying to myself as the fight began—just as cool as though I was home—this sure will mean war with Mexico because Carranza won't be able to explain away these men who are being killed. Then I began to wonder how many of the boys the "greasers" got.

"My God," I said, "there goes a machine gun!

"It must hurt to get a bullet through your head!

"D—— that white faced horse! I'd give him something to rear for if I had him back in Kentucky!

"It doesn't look much like Kentucky for me again!

"If I ever see real grass again I sure will take root!

"Why do these Spicks want to live or fight for a country that's so hot and dry?"

Just then I heard Bob, a big fellow in our company, shout: "I've got seven of the greasers!" And somebody yelled in reply: "Sieben come eleben."

The horses had quieted down a little and I decided to use my own automatic. I got one Mexican and funny as it seems now I began wondering what the boys back home would think if they knew I was away off in Mexico shooting Mexicans——and no danger of being arrested for it! This, I told myself, was killing that ought to be done and had to be done. If I didn't shoot them, they would shoot me.

And then they did.

Smash went something against my left shoulder and into it all at once. If you have ever been hit across the shoulder with a big stick, you will know how it feels to be shot in the shoulder, only the smash keeps up.

I had to leave go all the horses except my own, which I had fastened to my right arm with my lariat. A lot of men were down. I couldn't do any more shooting with my left arm useless, so I decided to make a run for it on my horse.

But it was easier to decide to make a dash for it out of that circle of death than to get into the saddle. How I cussed that horse as he backed and dragged me this way and that!

I hadn't had my horse long enough to give him a name, and anyway he was a Mexican horse. Once he almost stepped on somebody lying on the ground. I stopped and saw that it was Big Bob—dead.

A greaser bullet had got him in the neck. But it was the big red spot on the ground beside him that I will remember till it is my time to go. And I wondered why Big Bob had to go. He was the sort of man who seemed to be able to do everything better than anyone else. It was Bob who could manage any horse. It was Bob who could shoot seven Mexicans. It was Bob who could shoot craps better than any other man in the company.

Something went through me when I saw Bob lying there, giving me a sort of strength that the horse seemed to feel. He stopped his backing. I got my foot into the stirrup, threw my leg over the saddle and dug in my spurs.

These greasers! I swore I would go through their line, and I was sorry I could not take Bob with me.

I guided the horse for a spot where there seemed to be fewer Mexicans than anywhere else on the part of the line I was heading for. I was hanging low over my horse's neck when up rose two Spicks from behind a bush. Before they could get their guns to their shoulders smash went my horse against them!

I had a fleeting glimpse of those two Mexicans rolling in the dirt, then swish-s-sh—a bullet passed my face and ploughed its way through the upper part of my horse's neck.

That horse was all horse. He kept on and on, with the blood slowly working its way down his neck, and reddening the white sweat that covered his forelegs. But the Mexicans who followed me on horseback at last gave up the chase.

From the time I escaped from the circle of bullets at Carrizal until I got to Colonia Dublan I lived the terrible battle of Carrizal over and over again.

Now I know that the actual fighting is not the only part of a battle that has to be endured. There are the awful memories and the awful dreams.

HARRISON HILL LOTS AT REMARKABLE PRICES

After an inspection of Harrison Hill addition, located on Calhoun street directly south of Rudisill boulevard, most people are surprised to find that the lots in this addition, including all improvements, are sold at a price which does not exceed $22.00 per front foot. It is indeed remarkable that a tract of this character can be platted so as to include practically every modern development advocated by city planning experts and marketed at this figure. Harrison Hill has been layed out and the lots are now being sold by the firm of Hilgeman and Schaaf, located in the North American building, who were responsible for Arcadia Court and several other of the higher class additions of this city.

"Watching waiting" is not practiced by the newspaper men at Washington in these days of "wars and rumors of wars." The news gatherers are "up an' at it" from the moment the white house doors open. ONLY THE RIGHT KIND OF A HOUSE MAKES A REAL HOME

Almost any man can build a house—four walls and a roof. Some try to do better, but lack experience. We have built more real homes than anybody hereabouts. See us when you want to build.

NO SPECULATION IN BABY BONDS

Small investors who cannot afford to consider any security with an element of speculation in it are being attracted to Baby Bonds because of the absolute soundness of this investment as well as the generous rate of interest. Being secured by first mortgages on local real estate the men who are in a position to give sound advice on investments are quite unanimous in recommending them to this class of purchasers. Baby Bonds are in $10 denominations. There are also a few $500 bonds with the same security. Both bear six per cent interest. For further details see the Wildwood Sales Company, Shoaff building.
